The one great fact which medical science has established in combating yellow fever is that, beyond all per-adventure of doubt, it is the mosquito which spreads that frightfully fatal disease. The one great stride which scientific experiment has made in investigation of malarial fevers is the determination that, beyond all possibility of error, the mosquito is responsible for this wasting malady.

The fact has been demonstrated conclusively that the complete extermination of the seemingly insignificant insect would result in the absolute extermination of malarial and yellow fevers—and perhaps many other diseases as well.

These statements are not new. They have appeared time and again in the press throughout the country.

The one difficulty lies in convincing the public at large that the new theory is irrevocably and scientifically established; that these insects are actually at the bottom of these dread diseases, and that the herculean task of exterminating them falls not upon a community in general, but upon each and every member of that community.

How, despite repeated warnings, the counsels of the experts are left unheeded, may be seen by observation in almost every city, town, and village throughout the United States. A town or city which would consider itself scandalized if an uncovered garbage can were found within its limits, will permit open deposits of water on vacant lots and in faulty gutters to go undrained, to breed thousands of deadly insects, any one of which may cause the death of a score or more of citizens. People are used to mosquitoes; they cannot bring themselves to realize that there is any real harm in the insects.

To understand the danger of stagnant water, it is necessary to bear in mind only how the mosquito multiplies. The female mosquito must have water in which to lay her eggs. Water is as necessary to the hatching of the mosquito's eggs as is warmth to the incubation of those of a fowl. The eggs must remain on the water undisturbed for about three days before hatching, and after leaving the egg the insect, first in the form of larva—the well-known "wrigglers" found in standing water—and then pupa, exists in its native pool or barrel for five or six days, wriggling to the surface now and then for air, before changing into the full-fledged mosquito. This metamorphosis is much the same as that of the caterpillar when it changes into the butterfly. As soon as the mosquito kicks off the skin of the pupa, it is a full-grown insect and ready to begin business on its own account.

It naturally follows that the surest way of getting rid of the mosquito is to destroy the wrigglers, and the most certain way of attacking the wrigglers is to remove all open water deposits—the breeding places of the mosquitoes. Anything that will hold water is a possible larvae hatchery; an old basin; tin cans; the dog's drinking pan—in short, any receptacle which may be intentionally or accidentally left where it can catch rain water and be reached by a mosquito. Rain barrels and large pools are also breeding places; but these, too, may be easily disposed of. The former may be provided with covers having screened openings for the entrance of the water, to prevent the mosquito from reaching the water to deposit eggs. The ponds may be covered with a thin layer of kerosene which prevents the newly-hatched larvae from getting air; while the wrigglers cannot break through the coating of oil.

"But," you may ask, "how do we know that the mosquito carries disease? May not all the suggested precautions be, after all, of no avail?"

Some account of the experiments of the United States Yellow Fever Board in Cuba is probably the best answer.

In 1900 the United States sent to Cuba—the island being at that time under our control—a board of army medical men commissioned to investigate the existing yellow fever conditions, and, if possible, to determine the cause of the disease. It had long been supposed that yellow fever, like many other diseases, was transmitted from one person to another by direct contact or by emanations from a yellow fever patient. There were some things which it was difficult to account for under this theory; but there was no other explanation, and the disease was undoubtedly contagious—so every one thought. It was known that yellow fever was the result of a germ in the blood, and the Board, in making its experiments, used as a hypothesis the following suppositions, which it believed to be true:

1. That yellow fever was transmitted by the bite of a mosquito.

2. That the only mosquito capable of transmiting the disease was the female stegomyia.

3. That a person exposed to yellow fever, even if the disease were not carried by the insect, would develop yllow fever in less than six days, or not at all.

These suppositions were the result of experiments carried on previously by various doctors throughout the world. They were somewhat of an intermixing of the two theories, but they served the purpose, as will appear.

If the stegomyia weer responsible for the disease, it remained for the Board to prove it; and if it were a fact that yellow fever always resulted within six days of an exposure, it would be possible to determine conclusively that persons — volunteers—who were to re experimented upon would not develop the disease through any previous exposure, simply by keeping them away from the disease for a period of a week or longer.

The Board consisted of Dr. Reed, the president; and Doctors Carroll, Agromonte and Lazear. These men who were willing to sacrifice their own lives in the experiments if necessary, went enthusiastically into the work. They selected a tract of ground some distance from Havana, and, after thoroughly cleaning it so as to destroy all yellow fever germs which might be on the premises, they built a camp of thoroughly disinfected material and began their experiments.

In this place they kept the men to be experimented upon for a period of two weeks, and no cases of the disease having developed they were safe in concluding that none would develop as a result of exposure of the men before coming to the camp. Stegomyia mosquitoes had been hatched in jars in the camp, and one of these, a female—the male will not bite—was selected and taken in a glass tube to Havana, where she was allowed to bite a person suffering with yellow fever. The insect was afterward returned to the camp in the tube, which was carefully stopped with raw cotton to prevent her escape. She was then confined in a jar and allowed thoroughly to digest the blood taken, it having been previously determined that a mosquito cannot transmit the germs until from ten to twenty days after biting a patient. After the necessary number of days had passed, the mosquito was taken from the jar by placing a test-tube over her and then slipping a stopper of cotton in the open end. She was conveyed in this way to the arm of a man who had never had the disease, and there allowed to settle and fill herself with blood. After inserting her proboscis, the mosquito injects saliva into the flesh before drawing blood, and it is with this saliva that the germs are introduced into the system of her victim.

The first man who was bitten by an infected mosquito during the experiments developed in the course of six days an unmistakable case of yellow fever, though every one else in the camp remained in perfect health. The same experiment was repeated twelve or fifteen times; the result was always the same—the person bitten developed yellow fever within six days after the bite; all others remained well. This was pretty conclusive evidence that the mosquito, and nothing else, caused the disease.

As another experiment, a house was built, one room of which was tightly screened so that no mosquito might enter it, though air and any natural emanations which might cause the disease were free to pass through the room. The apartment was divided by a wire netting, and two men were permitted to sleep on each side of this division for a time sufficiently long to determine that nothing about the house was infected. Infected stegomyia were then released upon one side of the wire, one of the men having been previously removed, and were allowed to bite the remaining volunteer. The insects were caught and "bottled" in the course of half an hour, and within a few days the bitten man developed yellow fever. The three men, two on one side of the partition and one on teh other, the latter with yellow fever, continued to occupy the house, and although they were practically in the same room, breathing the same air and living under exactly the same conditions, a second case of the disease did not develop.

To prove that yellow fever could not be contracted through alleged infected articles of clothing, etc., a small, poorly ventilated room was filled with articles which had been exposed to the disease in the most intimate manner. There were carpets from infected rooms, mattresses upon which yellow fever patients had died, clothes taken from those dead of the fever, and blankets covered with the black vomit which is characteristic of the disease. Men lived in this room, wearing the clothes, sleeping on the mattresses under the blankets, and yet did not get the disease; neither did they seem to be at all affected by the placing of a person sick with the disease among them. They came out of the experiment as healthy and well as they went into it. No infected mosquitoes, however, were allowed to reach them.

These and many other experiments were conducted. Of course there were some minor failures; but the Board demonstrated conclusively that the female stegomyia was the direct cause of yellow fever.

DANDRUFF, FALLING HAIR STOPPED

Harmless, Old-Fashioned Remedy Brings Back Color to Gray Hair and Makes It Grow.

How many old-fashioned remedies are being used, which goes to show that it is hard to improve some of our grandmothers' old-time, tried remedies. For instance, for keeping the hair dark, soft and glossy nothing equals our grandmothers' "sage tea." Although, by the addition of sulphur and other ingredients, this old-fashioned brew has been made more effective as a scalp tonic and color restorer.

Nowadays, when our hair comes out or gets faded or gray, instead of going to the garden or garret for herbs and making the "tea" ourselves, we simply go to the nearest drug store and ask for a bottle of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy.

Druggists are authorized to sell it under guarantee that the money will be refunded if it fails to do exactly as represented.

This preparation is offered to the public at fifty cents a bottle, and is recommended and sold by all druggists.

Young Man Has Narrow Escape From Drowning

The Lindsay Post says:

A young man named Treevor had a narrow escape from a watery grave on Sunday, and he has Senator McHugh and M. H. McGeough to thank for his rescue.

These two gentlemen were driving through South Ops and when near the Cross Creeks they heard a noise in the weeds which attracted their attention. They immediately investigated and found young Treevor making a life and death struggle in the water, his canoe having upset in some manner. Treevor was unable to swim on account of the thickness of the weeds and was crying frantically for help. Messrs. McHugh and McGeough tied their horse to the bridge and ran for a distance of about half a mile in order to get near the young man. Luckily they found a skiff on the shore and they forced it through the weeds, close enough to Treevor, whose head was just above the water to enable him to grab the end of the oar. He was taken to the shore in an exhausted condition, and after a few minutes' rest was none the worse for his startling experience. He would undoubtedly have gone to his death had not assistance arrived in the nick of time.

COMPARISON OF PRICES

The Lindsay Warder says:

The people of Lindsay are somewhat inclined to grumble at the high market prices which seem almost exhorbitant to some, but the following comparison with Saturday's market at Peterborough shows that local citizens are somewhat better off than the residents of that city. In Peterborough butter sold at 25c. a pound, while here 22 and 23c was paid; eggs brought 20c. a dozen in the city, while 18c. was the price here; ducks sold at $1.25 per pair in Peterborough, compared with $1 a pair here. Live hogs sold at $7.50 in Peterborough, while $7 was paid in town; hay was about the same in both places as were raspberries, while new potatoes brought 45c. a peck in Peterborough.

CANOES WERE CAPSIZED

Two canoes were upset in Chemong Lake yesterday, but outside of a ducking the occupants escaped. A gasoline launch put out from the shore and rescued both parties.

"ADVENTURE"

By JACK LONDON

"And the first owners of Berande bought his recruits — a hard-bitten gang of murderers. They were all five-year boys. You see, the recruiter has the advantage over a boy trader—he makes a per-head jump. He could sign him on for ten years did the law permit. Well, that's the gang of murderers we've got on our hands now. Of course, some are dead and some have been killed, and there are others serving sentences at Tulagi. Very little clearing did those first owners do, and less planting. It was war all the time. They had one manager killed. Two of the partners had his shoulder slashed nearly off by a cane-knife. The other was speared on two different occasions. Both were bullies, wherefore there was a streak of cowardice in them, and in the end they had to give up. They were chased away — literally chased away—by their own niggers. And along came poor Hughie and me, two new chums, to take hold of that hard-bitten gang. We did not know the situation, and we had bought Berande, and there was nothing to do but hang on and muddle through somehow.

"At first we made the mistake of indiscreet kindness. We tried to rule by persuasion and fair treatment. The niggers concluded that we were afraid. I blush to think of what fools we were in those first days. We were imposed on, and threatened and insulted; and we put up with it, hoping our square dealing would soon mend things. Instead of which, everything went from bad to worse. Then came the day when Hughie reprimanded one of the boys, and was nearly killed by the gang. The only thing that saved him was the number on top of him, which enabled me to reach the spot in time.

"Then began the rule of the strong hand. It was either that or quit, and we had sunk about all our money into the venture, and we could not quit. And, besides, our pride was involved. We had started out to do something, and we were so made that we just had to go on with it. It has been a hard fight, for we were, and are to this day, considered the worst plantation in the Solomons from the standpoint of labour. Do you know we have been unable to get white men in. We've offered the manager's slip to half a dozen. I won't say they were afraid, for they were not. But they did not consider it healthy—at least that is the way it was put by the last one who declined our offer. So Hughie and I did the managing ourselves."

"And when he died you were prepared to go on all alone," Joan cried with shining eyes.

"I thought I'd muddle through. And now, Miss Lackland, please be charitable when I speak harsh and remember that the situation is unparalleled down here. We've got a bad crowd, and we're making them work. You've been over the plantation, and you ought to know. And I assure you that there are no better three-and-four-years-old trees on any other plantation in the Solomons. We have worked steadily to change matters for the better. We've been slowly getting in new labour. That is why we bought the Jessie. We wanted to select our own labour. In another year the time will be up for most of the original gang—you see they were recruited during the first year of Berande, and their contracts expire on different months. Naturally, they have contaminated the new boys to a certain extent; but that can soon be remedied, and then Berande will be a respectable plantation."

Joan nodded, but remained silent. She was too occupied in glimpsing the vision of the one lone white man as she had first seen him, helpless from fever, a colloposed wraith in a steamer chair, who, up to the last heartbeat, by some strange alchemy of race, was pledged to mastery.

"It is a pity," she said. "But the white man has to rule, I suppose."

"I don't like it," Sheldon assured her. "To save my life I can't imagine how I ever came here. But here I am and I can't run away."

"Blind destiny of race," she said, faintly smiling. "We whites have been land-robbers and sea-robbers from remotest time. It is in our blood, I guess, and we can't get away from it. "I never thought about it so abstractly," he confessed. "I've been too busy puzzling over why I came here."

CHAPTER VIII.

Local Colour.

At sunset a small ketch fanned in to anchorage, and a little later the skipper came ashore. He was a soft spoken, gentle-voiced young fellow of twenty, but he won Joan's admiration in advance when Sheldon told her that he ran the ketch all alone with a black crew from Malaita. And romance lured and beckoned before Joan's eyes when she learned he was Christian Young, a Norfolk islander, but a direct descendant of John Young, one of the original Bounty mutineers. The blend of Tahitian and English blood showed in his soft eyes and tawny skin, but the English headiness was there, and it was what enabled him to run his ketch single-handed, and to wring a livelihood out of the fighting Solomons.

Joan's unexpected presence embarrassed him, until she herself put him out at his ease by a frank, matter-of-fact manner that offended Sheldon's sense of the fitness of things feminine. News from the world Young had not, but he was filled with news of the Solomons. Fifteen boys had stolen rifles and run away into the bush from Lunga Plantation, which was farther east on the Guadalcanar coast. And from the bush they had sent word that they were coming back to wipe out the three white men in charge, while 2 of the 3 white men in turn, were hunting them through the bush. There was a strong possibility, Young volunteered, that if they were not caught they might circle around and tap the coast at Berande in order to steal or capture a whale-boat.

"I forgot to tell you that your trader at Ugi has been murdered," he said to Sheldon. "Five big canoes came down from Port Adams. They landed in the night time and caught Oscar asleep. What they didn't steal they burned. The Flibberty-Gibbet got the news at Mboli Pass and ran down to Agi. I was at Mboli when the news came."

"I think I'll have to abandon Ugi," Sheldon remarked.

"It's the second trader you've lost there in a year," Young concurred. "To make it safe, there ought to be two white men at least. Those Malaita canoes are always raiding down that way, and you know what that Port Adams lot is. I've got a dog for you. Tommy Jones sent it up from Neal Island. He said he'd promised it to you. It's a first-class nigger-chaser. Hadn't been on board two minutes when he had my whole boat's crew in the rigging. Tommy calls him Satan."

"I've wondered several times why you had no dogs here," Joan said.

"The trouble is to keep them. They are always eaten by the crocodiles."

"Jack Henley was killed at Marovo Lagoon two months ago," Young announced in his mild voice. "The news just came down on the Apostle."

"Where is Marovo Lagoon?" Joan asked.

"His own house-boys did it," Young went on; "but they were put up to it by the Marovo natives. His Santa Cruz boat's crew escaped in the whale-boat to Choiseul, and Mather, in the Lily, sailed over to Marovo. He burned a village and got Hanley's head back. He found it in one of the houses where the niggers had it drying. And that's all the news I've got, except that there's a lot of new Lee-Enfields loose on the eastern end of Ysabel. Nobody knows how the natives got them. The government ought to investigate. Ah-ah, yes—a war vessel's in the group, the Cambrian. She burned three villages at Bina—on account of the Minota, you know—and shelled the bush. Then she went to Sio to straighten out things there."

His large, almost girlish eyes rested on her for a moment before he replied, and then it was in the softest and gentlest of voices.

"Oh, I get along pretty well with them. Of course, there is a bit of trouble once in a while, but that must be expected. You must never let them think you are afraid. I've been afraid plenty of times, but they never knew it."

No Desire for Food

The Stomach Seems Played Out and the Appetite Fickle.

The Digestive System is Overloaded With Poisons—Relief Comes With the Use of

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS.

Weak stomach, loss of appetite, indigestion and all the accompanying symptoms of energy, tend to make the springtime anything but joyous for many people.

The system is full of poisons, the blood is impure, the liver and kidneys have been overworked in an effort to remove the waste matter and have failed. This accounts for the biliousness, the constipation, the backaches and headaches.

How is this condition to be overcome? There is no quicker or more certain way than by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. This treatment gets the liver and kidneys in action at once and ensures regular movement of the bowels.

The poisonous waste matter which has been clogging the digestive system is removed and the organs of digestion are enabled to properly perform their duties.

Appetite is sharpened, you eat your food with a relish, the stomach is strengthened, the vital organs get the nourishment they require, and vigour and energy are restored.

Beware of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills to have impure blood or to suffer the annoyance of tired, spring feelings. One pill a dose, 25c. a box. Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

Is YOUR Baby STURDY, or just FAT?

Some foods merely puff out a child with fat, without leaving any solid good behind. A baby at five or six months may be a triumph of the fattening powers of food—and yet, at two years, may be thin and suffering from rickets.

NEAVE'S FOOD FOR INFANTS

Is perfectly balanced. It not only produces a fine baby—it also insures that baby growing into a healthy adult, because Neave's Food contains all the essentials for flesh and bone.

"Our eldest boy, Maurice, is five years old. We put him on Neave's Food when he was one week old and he never tasted anything else until his first birthday. He is very bright and intelligent, strong and sturdy, has never had an illness and is one of the handsomest boys I have ever seen. We owe it all to the good foundation laid by Neave's Food." Mrs. J. A RUNAWAY

Two little girls had a narrow escape from serious injury on Sunday night, when the vehicle in which they were riding, was overturned. The gentleman who had been driving the horse, got out of the buggy at a residence on Reid street hill and the horse bolted just as he was going to tie it. It ran down Reid street hill to McDonnel street, and just as it turned the corner, it stumbled and fell, overturning the buggy. The occupants were thrown out, but escaped without a scratch.

Embroidered Voile Skirts

From $6.00 to $12.50

Voile is probably the most popular fabric this summer. Embroidery is always the most elegant form of trimming. But this season it has the additional merit of being pronounced "modish"

These skirts are made of a very fine quality voile, and the many different models are fashioned in strict accordance with the newest styles. Every detail of finishing is perfect, and the embroidering is unusually artistic in design and well worked. Size range complete.

The number is limited

These Skirts would be worth any price you paid for them. They are exceptional values at $6.00 to $12.50

DELIGHTFUL DANCE HELD AT JUNIPER ISLAND

Big Attendance at Saturday Night Hop Last Week—Music Was Furnished by the Misses Dorris of Peterborough.

A GREAT SUCCESS

Special to The Examiner

JUNIPER ISLAND, JULY 25.—No doubt you all are familiar with Juniper berires, but, up here, we have a naw variety, to wit: Juniper 'Hops'. The first appearance took place last Saturday night.

The young people of Stoney Lake have inaugurated a series of dances to take place every Saturday evening during the holiday season.

If the opening night is any criterion of what is to follow then their success is assured. Juniper Island, last Saturday night, was the scene of a brilliant function, consisting of a regular programme of dances and intermissions. The Misses Doris of Peterborough, provided the music for the entire evening, and was greatly appreciated by those who participated in the various numbers. A nominal entrance fee to the pavilion was made to defray expenses.

Not only did the cottagers enter heartily into the project but numbers of people drove or motored from Peterborough to McCracken's Landing to join the happy throng.

The new addition to the pavilion was made none too soon, for it was taxed to its utmost, as the gaily dressed young people threaded the mazy paths of the waltz, and their admiring friends encircled the scene.

The casual observer, as he meandered up and down on the outside was impressed with the manner in which the non-participants enjoyed the occasion. Not only did they drink in the enchanting music, but their pleased countenances bespoke approval, particularly those known to be opposed to dancing, on general principles. But how could it be otherwise, for here it was being practised under the most hygienic and ideal conditions?

Instead of the hot, stuffy ball room they had the open-air pavilion; instead of warm winter clothing, they were attired in the coolest raiment: instead of the frosty night and its attendant dangers they breathed the pure health-giving, balsamic odours of the beautiful Kawartha Lakes.

Next Saturday night, if climatic conditions are favourable, should be a record-breaker and lead up to a fitting climax near Regatta day.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

"I GAIN nothing by being with such as myself. We encourage one another in mediocrity."—Charles Lamb.

Who are your friends?

Are they people in whose society you take a torpid comfort because they continually look up to you and praise you?

Or are they mostly "such as yourself?"

Or are they the bigger folks who often make you feel ill at ease and splendidly uncomfortable because you cannot help realizing your own inferiority?

Tell me which and I will tell you whether you are retrogading or standing still or progressing in your development.

There is no tonic that promotes mental and spiritual growth like self-dissatisfaction.

"To be satisfied with your possessions but not contented with yourself until you have made the most of them"—such dissatisfaction is the soul's "growing pains."

And the best way to stimulate this divine discontent is to have as many friends as possible whom you admire and look up to, who require you to wait constantly on your mental and spiritual tiptoes in order to be anywhere near their level.

Of course I am not unaware that there is a semi-humorous aspect to this advice in their side of the situation. I remind myself of the boy who, on being told that a man was known by the company he kept, promptly queried, "But father, if a good man keeps company with a bad man, is the good man bad because he keeps company with the bad man, or the bad man good because he keeps company with the good man?"

Of course, if you make all your friends among your superiors that makes it necessary for them to consort with an inferior.

But I don't believe there is any danger that all your friends will be larger than you.

All I urge is that you make sure that enough of them are superior to keep you from being drugged with self content.

TORONTO GLOBE'S TRIBUTE TO MR. F. D. KERR, LIBERAL CANDIDATE IN THE EAST

The Toronto Globe says: Mr. F. D. Kerr, of Peterborough, the candidate of the Liberal party in the riding of East Peterborough for the Dominion Parliament, is widely and favourably known throughout the whole county of Peterborough, and his selection has called forth many expressions of esteem not only from his own political friends, but from his political opponents, which are moderate in tone, are marked by judgment, force and clearness of expression.

Public-spirited and active in all matters relating to the public benefit, Mr. Kerr's election as a member of the Dominion Parliament will not only strengthen the Liberal party in the Midland district of Ontario, but will be the means of introducing into public life a man of high ideals who, being splendidly equipped, is probably destined to take a foremost position among Canadian public men.

ASSAULT CASE WAS DISMISSED

Case of Non-Payment of Wages Will Be Tried on Thursday

OTHER CASES

The case of assault, which was to have been tried in the County Court this morning, was dismissed, as the parties in connection with it, preferred to settle it out of court, the defendant paying all costs. The information was laid with Magistrate Edmison by Wm. Dixon, the County Constable for Asphodel, charging Robt. Hope with common assault on Wm. Cox, both of Asphodel. The men got together and settled the case out of court.

Louis Abraham wil be tried at Norwood to-morrow for peddling without a license. Magistrate Edmison will go to Norwood to officiate.

A North Monaghan man, named Edward Fountain, has laid charges for non-payment of wages on George Gowan and William Whitefield, both of the same Township. The case will be tried before Magistrate Edmison, on Thursday morning.

THE BY-LAWS.

On Friday of this week, July 28th, the ratepayers of Peterborough will be given the opportunity of expressing their opinion on three very important by-laws. One of these is to provide for the borrowing of $24,000 for the creating of several more parks in the city; the other two are for the purpose of fixing the assessment for a term of years of the Peterborough Lock Manufacturing Company and of the B. F. Ackerman, Son & Company, respectively. The Examiner believes that all three of these measures should be heartily supported by the citizens who are urged to turn out and poll their votes in support of the measures.

As regards the Park by-law, it must be clearly recognised that Peterborough is growing so rapidly that in a few years suitable breathing spaces will be most difficult to secure. The price of the land is advancing correspondingly with the growth of the city and park locations that can be obtained now at a reasonable figure will be worth many times their present price in a few years. The City Council has wisely recognized this fact and has outlined a plan by which it will be able to provide three new parks in the south, east and west part of the city. That these are needed now is admitted; that they will be far more badly needed in a few years' time is a matter that cannot be disputed. Surely the ratepayers will realize the wisdom and importance of supporting the by-law when it is laid before them on Friday.

The by-laws to fix the assessment of the two manufacturing concerns are merely the carrying out of the agreement between the companies in question and the City Council. The Mayor and Chairman of the Manufacturers committee of the City Council make this point clear in a letter to the ratepayers in another section of to-day's issue. The Council believe that these two measures should be passed for the reasons they have advanced in their communication. The companies have carried out their part of the agreement; the Council can only legally complete their share with the co-operation of the ratepayers. The concerns in question are long established industries who employ a large number of men and whose yearly pay-roll is a very considerable amount. Their work of enlarging their plants and thus making it possible to give employment to a large number should be encouraged by the citizens.

Support all three by-laws on Friday and show that you are ready to do your part in Peterborough's advancement.

A $100 TROPHY

To be Given by Province of Alberta to Dry-Farming Congress

Edmonton, Alberta, Can., July 22.—Hon. Duncan Marshall, Minister of Agriculture, has notified the managers of the International Dry-Farming Congress, which meets at Colorado Springs, Oct. 16, that the Province of Alberta will give a $100 trophy cup as one of the premiums at the Dry-Farmed Exposition.

The cup will be awarded for the best exhibit of forage crops and grasses made by any county or district, and is open to the world's competition. It will be a handsome affair of sterling silver. Canada took the grand sweepstakes prize at the Dry-Farming Exposition last year.

Agricultural practices known as "dry-farming" are beginning to be universally used in this part of Canada, where the farmers are plowing deep and summer fallowing.

Trip Was A Success

Under the auspices of the Knights of Columbus, a very successful trip was made to Gore's Landing yesterday. The steamer Stoney Lake left the Wolfe street wharf at 1.30, reaching Gore's Landing about 4 o'clock. Here the assembly landed for tea after which a game of baseball was played, the married men opposing the single, with the result that the single men won by a very close margin.

After about 3 hours' stay at Gore's Landing, the passengers re-embarked and the st amer proceeded to Idyl Wyld. Leaving that place about 9 o'clock the Peterborough wharf was reached about 11 p.m.

Dr. McNulty acted as chairman of the committee and Mr. H. Phelan as secretary.

POST CARD COLUMN

Editor Post Card Column:

Dear Sir,—Having heard so much about the new bridge on Smith street, I decided to see what it was like, and accordingly started out yesterday to have a look at it. I have only been in Peterborough about a year and I find it a very interesting little place. The Smith street bridge is surely a fine one, but what is the matter with the Council or Mayor that one has to run the risk of breaking his neck to get down Smith street to the bridge? I asked a resident why they did not ask for a sidewalk and was informed that they have been asking for one for over ten years. From Harvey street down, the sidewalk is a disgrace. I was told the people want a new sidewalk outside the trees. It would mean a jog at the corner of Harvey and Smith street, but it would mean a great deal to the appearance of the street. But the city engineer and council are not in favour of putting it outside the trees. Now, if the people have to pay for the sidewalk I should think they ought to have a say where it is to be laid. It is a crime to put the new sidewalk where it is now when the street could be improved so much by putting it out, and when there will never be a sidewalk on the other side.

Thanking you for your space, Mr. Editor, I am,

Yours sincerely,
"WEST ENDER."

TEAM RAN AWAY

A team of horses attached to a delivery wagon made a wild run out Simcoe street, about noon. They took fright at something over near Aylmer street and ran out Simcoe to Queen street, turning north on Queen. They were stopped and caught just after they made the turn. It was miraculous how the waggon escaped being smashed to pieces, as the horses tore along the street as a terrible speed.

MANY GUESTS AT BEAUTIFUL "VIAMEDE"

Special to The Examiner:

VIAMEDE, STONEY LAKE, JULY 25.—No place on Stoney Lake seems to enjoy such prolonged popularity as Viamede.

Its generous size appeals to the well-travelled public; its spacious dining roof and splendid service impresses the most fastidious; its imposing appearance, which smacks of the American resort, is a drawing card to the visitor from across the line; its spotless cleanliness and up-to-date water and sewage system pleases the man of metropolitan tastes.

Its commanding position and proximity to the mountain behind Julian Landing makes it a favourite with the lovers of nature; its accessibility suits the man of affairs, who can spend only a few days at a time.

Its well stocked store, particularly its drug department, puts the seal of satisfaction on the mind of the nervous mother who leaves her family physician with many misgivings as to the various ills that may befall her children during the holiday.

Its private yacht proves a veritable "Magnet" to the visitor who wishes to make the most of his limited holiday.

Is it any wonder then that "Viamede" continues to grow in favour with those who seek a perfect vacation under ideal conditions?

One writer has very aptly said: "Viamede, among other things, is noted for its healthy location, its pure spring water, and its care of those who seek rest, appetite and pleasure under its hospitable roof."

This spring Mr. Graham had the exterior treated to a new coat of paint which adds greatly to the attractiveness of this favourite resort.

The following are among those who have graced it with their presence: Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Symington, Beaverton; Mr. M. E. Bogue, New York city; Mr. and Mrs. D. K. Book, Toronto; Mr. and Mrs. Glen H. By keeping the scalp clean and healthy and destroyin gthe dandruff germ, Newbro's Herpicide makes beautiful hair. Herpicide prevents the hair from falling and allows it to grow unhindered and naturally except in the cases of chronic baldness, which is incurable.

ASSAULT CASE WAS DISMISSED

Case of Non-Payment of Wages Will Be Tried on Thursday

OTHER CASES

The case of assault, which was to have been tried in the County Court this morning, was dismissed, as the parties in connection with it, preferred to settle it out of court, the defendant paying all costs. The information was laid with Magistrate Edmison by Wm. Dixon, the County Constable for Asphodel, charging Robt. Hope with common assault on Wm. Cox, both of Asphodel. The men got together and settled the case out of court.

Louis Abraham wil be tried at Norwood to-morrow for peddling without a license. Magistrate Edmison will go to Norwood to officiate.

A North Monaghan man, named Edward Fountain, has laid charges for non-payment of wages on George Gowan and William Whitefield, both of the same Township. The case will be tried before Magistrate Edmison, on Thursday morning.

THE BY-LAWS.

On Friday of this week, July 28th, the ratepayers of Peterborough will be given the opportunity of expressing their opinion on three very important by-laws. One of these is to provide for the borrowing of $24,000 for the creating of several more parks in the city; the other two are for the purpose of fixing the assessment for a term of years of the Peterborough Lock Manufacturing Company and of the B. F. Ackerman, Son & Company, respectively. The Examiner believes that all three of these measures should be heartily supported by the citizens who are urged to turn out and poll their votes in support of the measures.

As regards the Park by-law, it must be clearly recognised that Peterborough is growing so rapidly that in a few years suitable breathing spaces will be most difficult to secure. The price of the land is advancing correspondingly with the growth of the city and park locations that can be obtained now at a reasonable figure will be worth many times their present price in a few years. The City Council has wisely recognized this fact and has outlined a plan by which it will be able to provide three new parks in the south, east and west part of the city. That these are needed now is admitted; that they will be far more badly needed in a few years' time is a matter that cannot be disputed. Surely the ratepayers will realise the wisdom and importance of supporting the by-law when it is laid before them on Friday.

The by-laws to fix the assessment of the two manufacturing concerns are merely the carrying out of the agreement between the companies in question and the City Council. The Mayor and Chairman of the Manufacturers committee of the City Council make this point clear in a letter to the ratepayers in another section of to-day's issue. The Council believe that these two measures should be passed for the reasons they have advanced in their communication. The companies have carried out their part of the agreement; the Council can only legally complete their share with the co-operation of the ratepayers. The concerns in question are long established industries who employ a large number of men and whose yearly pay-roll is a very considerable amount. Their work of enlarging their plants and thus making it possible to give employment to a large number should be encouraged by the citizens.

Support all three by-laws on Friday and show that you are ready to do your part in Peterborough's advancement.

POST CARD COLUMN

Dear Sir,—Having heard so much about the new bridge on Smith street, I decided to see what it was like, and accordingly started out yesterday to have a look at it. I have only been in Peterborough about a year and I find it a very interesting little place. The Smith street bridge is surely a fine one, but what is the matter with the Council or Mayor that one has to run the risk of breaking his neck to get down Smith street to the bridge? I asked a resident why they did not ask for a sidewalk and was informed that they have been asking for one for over ten years. From Harvey street down, the sidewalk is a disgrace. I was told the people want a new sidewalk outside the trees. It would mean a jog at the corner of Harvey and Smith street, but it would mean a great deal to the appearance of the street. But the city engineer and council are not in favour of putting it outside the trees. Now, if the people have to pay for the sidewalk I should think they ought to have a say where it is to be laid. It is a crime to put the new sidewalk where it is now when the street could be improved so much by putting it out, and when there will never be a sidewalk on the other side.

Thanking you for your space, Mr. Editor, I am,

Yours sincerely,

Its well stocked store, particularly its drug department, puts the seal of satisfaction on the mind of the nervous mother who leaves her family physician with many misgivings as to the various ills that may befall her children during the holiday.

Its private yacht proves a veritable "Magnet" to the visitor who wishes to make the most of his limited holiday.

Is it any wonder then that "Viamede" continues to grow in favour with those who seek a perfect vacation under ideal conditions?

One writer has very aptly said: "Viamede, among other things, is noted for its healthy location, its pure spring water, and its care of those who seek rest, appetite and pleasure under its hospitable roof."

This spring Mr. Graham had the exterior treated to a new coat of paint which adds greatly to the attractiveness of this favourite resort.

The following are among those who have graced it with their presence: Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Symington, Beaverton; Mr. M. E. Bogue, New York city; Mr. and Mrs. D. K. Book, Toronto; Mr. and Mrs. Glen H. Promises won't overcome hair trouble. The manufacturers of Newbro's Herpicide promise nothing which is not justified by an intelligent use of this preparation. Prize Lists Out For The Industrial Exhibition

The prize list for the ninth Peterborough Industrial Exhibition, to be held this year on Sept. 14, 15 and 16, has just been issued from the Examiner presses, and is more complete and comprehensive than ever before, giving a good idea of the advance and progress the Exhibition has made under the present management. With the exhibition less than two months away the directors have commenced to put their shoulders to the wheel, and the probabilities are that the 1911 exhibition will be the greatest in the history of the Association. $3500 will be given away in prize money this year. Special arrangements have been made with the railways and steam boat companies for reduced rates during the Exhibition. Secretary F. J. A. Hall to the Exhibition and may be found at any time up to the Saturday before the Exhibition at the Sheriff's office, Bell Telephone No. 312. The week preceding the fair he will be at R. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Hon. Mr. Fielding Deliver an Ultimatum in House of Commons

RECIPROCITY DEBATE

Ottawa, July 25.—Parliament's proceedings yesterday were fraught with deep significance. They spell an early crisis in the existing impasse. Both Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Hon. Mr. Fielding spoke with candor, clarity and emphasis, and their utterances were heralded by such a storm of applause as told overwhelmingly of the temper of the Liberal party in every province.

The Opposition initiated the demonstration. For a week past its members have held the country's legislation at bay while they talked. Not a single item of public business has been advanced. And the people have grasped the situation.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Fielding announced the position of the Government. Both Ministers placed the issue plainly before the House and the country. The Premier brushed the cobwebs of misunderstanding and doubt away. Obstruction must inevitably mean dissolution and an immediate appeal to the people. If reciprocity, redistribution and other public business are to be held up by the minority and Government made a farce, then, as Sir Wilfrid Laurier himself put it, 'there are judges over us to judge between the Government and the Opposition."

The reciprocity discussion was precipitated by W. S. Middlebro (North Grey), who, commenting on an article in The Toronto Globe charging the Opposition with obstruction, said that there was evidently a conspiracy to misrepresent the attitude of the Opposition. There was no doubt in his mind that the Government had found itself between the devil and the deep sea, and had intended for some time past to go to the country. The object of keeping Parliament in session at the present time was simply to endeavor to place the blame of going to the country before redistribution on the Conservatives. Mr. Fielding had said that every member of the Opposition would be given an opportunity of expressing his views, and yet at the present time, when 55 Opposition members had not spoken, they were charged with obstruction.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier replied: "My hon. friend rose for the purpose of trying to convince this House and the country at large that the Opposition is not obstructing the business of the Government and is not obstructing the reciprocity agreement, which has been before this House since Jan. 26 last. However, he had not proceeded very far before he gave away his whole case. He protests that the Opposition is not obstructing, yet at the same time he says, 'Let reciprocity wait.' If he is not obstructing, why should not reciprocity go on? That is what we on this side of the House want. We do not want reciprocity to wait. The hon. gentleman opposite told us what we already knew, and I thank him for being so candid in the statement, that we did not want reciprocity to go through, but wanted it to wait, and that they are trying to-day in this House to prevent it from going on."

"If the hon. gentlemen wish to prevent an election, let us go on with the reciprocity agreement, and there will be no election. I have nothing to hide in this matter. I will speak to the House with perfect candor. When I saw the evidences of obstruction taking place in this House day after day—(cries of no, no)—when I read the reports of the speeches made here while I was in England, and when I learned that the leader of the Opposition was making a triumphal tour of the country.

"We are before the people, and if Government is to be made a farce, if the minority abuses the privileges of a minority in order to prevent progress, there are judges over us to decide between the Government and the Opposition. Surely these hon. gentlemen do not object to an election, and when we tell them that we do not object they cheer, but when we take steps to have an election they find fault. But we understand all this. The last thing they want is to go before the country. Well, there is one way in which it is possible to avoid going to the country, and that is to pass this agreement, so that the farmers of Canada may have the market of the United States open to their products. That is our position."

As to redistribution Sir Wilfrid said that there was not time for it. It would come next year.

R. L. Borden answered the Premier. "The Prime Minister is pressing for a vote in the House. Well, we are pressing for a vote in the country, a vote of the people. The right hon. gentleman who professes himself to be a Liberal of the British school, a democrat to the hilt, is unwilling to give that vote except at the sacrifice of redistribution."

Mr. Borden repeated his offer of the sixth of March to take the census, give the west its increased representation and then submit the question to the people of Canada.

The Prime Minister knows very well what the actual situation is. He knows perfectly well that he and his colleagues made a careful estimate of this situation weeks and months ago as to how they would stand without re-distribution. Taking everything into consideration, they decided that it would been prudent thing to appeal to the country without re-distribution. When the right hon. gentleman talks about obstruction, I would like to remind him of some occasions when he did not entertain exactly the same views when he spoke of the minority abusing its right. What did he do with the minority when he was a member of it in 1896? I venture to say that that minority was abusing its right very much more than the minority had abused its rights during the present session. What does he think of the course he took in 1896?

Mr. Fielding was quickly on his feet to reply to the leader of the Opposition. For six months the Opposition had been shouting that what they wanted above everything on earth was an appeal to the people, and if there was anything they had made clear, if there was anything on earth they did not want it was an appeal to the people.

An interruption occurred at this point and Mr. Cowan (Vancouver) called: "Take it back." The Minister of Finance wanted to know what he would take back.

"The Minister of Finance has never heard one word from this side of the House or from any Conservative newspaper to indicate that we were fearful of going before the people."

Considerable wrangling followed and the incident passed with Opposition cries. "Bring it on, why don't you bring it on?" referring to the election.

"And I say," went on the Minister, "that the hon. gentlemen opposite are doing their utmost to prevent this Government of doing any business, and the business of this Government is to give the country reciprocity, and in due course to give the country redistribution, and the hon. gentlemen by the action they are taking are doing their best to prevent our giving either the one or the other."

In conclusion, Mr. Fielding demurred at the suggestion of Mr. Lancaster that a constitutional principle had been violated, and told Col. Hughes that the delegation to Washington last year did not bind the Canadian Parliament.

Canada's Vote Decides.

London, July 25.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Pall Mall Gazette says nobody who has taken a broad view of the reciprocity agreement could ever have expected the United States of America not to welcome it on farsighted grounds since it so manifestly makes directly for ultimate dominance of the entire American continent by the States.

The vote of the Canadian people will really decide whether Canada's future is to be mainly Imperial or American entirely.

The Evening Standard says J. J. Hill and other American politicians openly confess that their desire for reciprocity is prompted by wish to thwart British Imperial federation. Some go further and say reciprocity can only end in annexation. One thing is certain that the preference now given British manufacturers in Canada will not be...

PREMIER'S STATEMENT

London, July 26.—The last act of the Parliamentary revolution was ushered in yesterday with a revolutionary scene. For the first time in the history the House of Commons refused to listen to a speech by the Prime Minister. For the first time in its history the Speaker of the House was compelled to invoke the rule which empowers him "in the case of grave disorder" to declare the sitting adjourned on his own responsibility.

No such hostile passions have been given free rein in a chamber which traditionally carries on its debates with chivalrous courtesy, since the stormy days of the Gladstone home rule bills.

During the three-quarters of an hour Mr. Asquith rose at short intervals and read a sentence or two from a manuscript, only to be overwhelmed by jeers, hootings and cries, among which "traitor" was the most frequent, but with "Redmond," "Patrick Ford" and "American dollars" often distinguishable.

Again and again the Prime Minister tried to speak, but his voice was drowned in the whirlwind. He gave utterance to a few broken sentences, a word or two of which could be heard. Finally his mouth hardened and he glared at his tormentors like a lion at bay—an impressive figure with straight cut features flushed with anger and heavy gray hair. He closed his manuscript and cried: "I am not going to degrade myself. I shall simply state the conclusion at which the Government has arrived."

Having announced the Government's intentions as briefly and hurriedly as possible—although they were not heard—the Premier sank back into his seat.

The leaders in the outburst against the Prime Minister were Lord Hugh Cecil, an intensely unpopular member of one of the most patrician families, and a young barrister, F. E. Smith, who recently achieved prominence in the Conservative party. The former kept up a constant fire of cries, and the Labor member, Will Crooks, in rough clothes and slouch hat, sitting across the aisle, several times jumped up as though about to assault him, but was pulled back by a friendly hand.

The Speaker's pleadings to "observe the decencies of debate," were drowned in the tumult. The wonder was that the crowded House did not come to blows, but the belligerent members were often pulled down by their neighbors. The political hatred engendered by the bill made the session memorable to many. So violent were the Opposition members and so indignant were the Ministerialists that the Speaker, after two hours, decided to suspend the sitting in order to obviate graver disorders.

The members dispersed amid a scene of violent excitement, foots or "Traitor," "Coward," following the Prime Minister as he departed, to which the Ministerialists hurled back cries of "You're beaten," "We will win."

Mr. Asquith last night issued to the newspapers a summary of the speech. In the speech he contended that the principles of the machinery of the bill had been before the people at two elections. By no form of referendum devisable could the opinion of the electorate have been more carefully ascertained.

Inquest Adjourned.

St. Catharines, July 25—The inquest into the death of Edna Comfort and her three-year-old child, found dead in Beamsville reservoir a month ago, was resumed yesterday, but immediately adjourned for a month, to allow officers of the crown to investigate the many rumors prevalent. The immense crowd of farmers and others present were disappointed at the adjournment. The fruit growers of the surrounding district had evidently taken a holiday to attend, although this is their busiest time.

Dr. Fairchild, one of the doctors who made the post-mortem, still holds to the suicide theory in the case of the mother.

Engineer's Body Found.

Port Colborne, July 25.—The body of Charles P. Smith, G.T.R. engineer, of Sarnia, was found floating yesterday in the canal, two miles from where his engine went down on the night of the 20th. Mr. Smith was 36 years of age and leaves a widow. Interment will take place in Sarnia on Wednesday.

Lindsay Comments On Saturday's Press Game Some Interesting Details

Here is what the Lindsay papers have to say of the game in Lindsay on Saturday between the local and Scugog printers. Says the Warder:

It was like ye olden times to see a baseball team from Peterborough here Saturday and the result of the contest with the Lindsay nine was also like the stories told, "once upon a time," because the Lindsay nine came out of the fray with the long end of the tally, the Petes with the diminutive end—13 to 6.

The two rival teams were not Eastern League, nor Midland League stars, but instead were nine humble printers from the Electric City, and an equal number of frisky type slingers from this town, and although the game was not of the professional brand, yet it was decidedly interesting and the score is by no means an indication of the play. The local typos were lucky enough to secure eight runs in the second innings, which put them on Easy street. The game was played before a large crowd of electors, suffragettes, printers and other respectable citizens, and all were pleased to see the local youngsters pull off a victory o' such sterling proportions. The rooters became very enthusiastic and cheered their pets to the echo. A team from Peterborough always takes well in Lindsay, and the small boy, as is customary, got in his usual number of jokes on the Electric City nine.

On the Peterborough line-up there were one or two familiar faces, including a former typographer, namely, George Johnson, who is apparently an all round man, for he played no less than three positions in Saturday's game. In fact the visiting ad. artists appeared to be adept (or otherwise) in any posit ion, and the shifts made by Capt. Miller were numerous. However, he at last got his team mates working nicely when he put young Swanston on the mound and "Fat" Taylor behind to do the receiving. The kids worked well together and the slants of the former, combined with the activity of the latter combined to make an excellent battery.

It is expected that the return game will be played in Peterborough next Saturday, and the local typesters will no doubt be accompanied by a large following. If the game Saturday next is as interesting as the one here, the Peterborough citizens should turn out in large numbers, for it was a game well worth watching.

The Peterborough kid battery refused to go into the game at first, because they feared to perform before the grand stand, being only accustomed to playing catch at the rear of one of the Peterborough printing offices. When they did get into harness they did themselves proud.

The Lindsay Post has the following notes:

Well done boys! Can you do it again in Peterborough next Saturday afternoon?

If satisfactory arrangements can be made a special train will be run to Peterborough next Saturday afternoon, leaving here at 1.30.

Charley Curtis, the "Walt Mason" of the Peterborough Review, another old Strathcona player ,also jumped into the game, playing both short and third bag.

Sharrard, make-up on the Peterborough Examiner, "covered" second sack. Some of the fans thought he was Dr. Beattie Nesbitt.

The visitors were a jolly aggregation and enjoyed the trip to Lindsay immensely.

Save for a couple of bad innings, the game was a very good one to witness.

HOW McCORMICK WAS SENT TO THE GIANTS

"One day Providence was batting Jersey City extra innings," said Fullerton. "In the eleventh the Rhode Islanders worked a man around to third, and the batsman, with one out, knocked a long fly to left field. It looked like a cinch for the runner at third to score. The throw to the plate was ten feet wide. McCormick, the next man to the bat, saw it coming and took a crack at the ball, driving it to right field. The umpire declared the runner out on account of McCormick interfering with the ball. Manager Billy Murray of the Providence club asked McCormick what he meant by hitting a ball thrown by one of the opposing outfielders.

"'What kind of foolishness was running around loose in your top piece when you swung at that ball?' enquired Murray

"'Well, it was the first straight one I've seen to-day, and I just couldn't keep from bumping it on the seam,' said McCormick.

"'So that's the way you play ball,' replied Murray. 'Johnny McGraw wants you for the New York Giants. I never did admire McGraw extravagantly, so I'll slip you over to him at once.'"

McCormick lasted a season or two with New York, then quite baseball and is now a travelling salesman.

Connie Mack Builds A For Future Teams Has Many Youngsters

Arthur Irwin, scout of the New York Americans, once made the famous remark that the day of the scout would soon be a thing of the past, for every young player in the country belonged to Connie Mack. The gray haired spy was led to this fit of pessimism because in one week he looked over a half dozen callow youths, only to find, when he broached negotiations, that they blonged to the ball tutor of Philadelphia.

The long arm of Mack has assuredly reached in all directions of the thirteen original states and the other states that don't claim originality. In the infant class at Sunday school, the deestrick school, the prep school and the colleges are youthful absorbers of knowledge waiting for the magic day when a night letter reaches them saying, "Report at once, kiddo—Connie Mack."

Mr. Mack prefers the little red schoolhouse to the bush league, yet he is not insensible to the wealth of ore found on the crossroads and minor league teams. Mr. Mack can consult his files and find out how many hits Harry Krausemeyer, third baseman of the Shincheimer, Kuppenkleister and Tappanhanger's Sticky Fly Paper company's team at Laxyville, Ala., made last week.

Connie also can tell what team is leading in the Sunday School league of Ingersoll, Neb., and knows that Pagan, the Primitive Methodists' star pitcher, has a great drop and might be worth a trial in 1913 or 1914.

It is a fact that Connie Mack has any number of youths planted who are hardly old enough to leave their firesides. Two years ago, at the age of sixteen, a Philadelphia schoolboy signed a contract to play with Mack. This tall tactician may wait two years more before ordering this juvenile south with his team.

Peters, the young California first baseman, has been planted by Mack for several years. For fear that he might be extradited to California on the charge of kidnapping, Mack didn't dare order the infant to report until spring.

Mack has youths planted for delivery in 1912, 1913, 1914 and 1915 He will call them as he needs them, but every year he is sure of a big squad of candidates in case some calamity strikes his team. No manager in America looks as far ahead as the Athletics' master mind.

Baseballdom thought it wonderful when Mack took a team of nobodies in 1909 and finished second to Detroit. Fans that year tossed posies at Mack for getting a good team together so quickly, but they didn't know that Mack was planning for 1909 in 1907.

Mack is a baseball teacher as well as manager. In this he has a great advantage over the majority of managers. There are few managers who can take a raw ball player and mold him into a star. Most big league managers expect their new men to be almost the finished product from the start.

How many managers have released players with this statement: "The boy is promising enough, but he lacks experience. He must be taught the ways of the big league." This kind of manager hasn't the patience nor the ability to teach anybody baseball.

Mack never released a promising player in his life, but he has released scores of bad ball players. Mack doesn't believe that a player can be taught the ways of the big league on the Squashtown team. He keeps him at Shibo park and teaches him himself.

Field Day Of Sports

The Trades and Labour Council intends holding a big field day of sports on Riverside Park Labour Day and Mr. J. J. Thompson, physical director of the Y.M.C.A., has been asked to draw up a list of events. The list has not been completed as yet, but there will be an event, new to Peterborough sprgging circles in a quarter mile ladies' walking race. There will be a suitable programme of sports for which suitable prizes are to be given.

The Labour Council are sparing no expense to make this one of the best sporting meets ever held in Peterborough and the prizes to be given are of the best and will be displayed in the window of a George street merchant in the near future.

BATTING AVERAGES OF PETES

Quinlan Still Leads His Team With the Stick

Saturday's game did not materially effect the batting averages of the Petes except to raise Quinlan, Murphy and O'Brien a few points and lower the rest of the squad a few more. Six of the ten regulars have hit over the .300 mark so far this season. The averages follow:

	G.	A.B.	H.	P.C.
Quinlan	6	25	13	.520

BASEBALL

Ashton, the clever pitcher of the Grand Trunk team of Bellevelle, who beat Peterborough here a week ago Saturday 4 to 3, in ten innings, also pitches for the Richmond team of the Montreal City League, and last week he won a thirteen innings' game against the All-Montreal team by 2 to 1, holding his opponents to two hits in thirteen stanzas. The Richmonds, (Ashton's team) are leading the Montreal League with a record of eight stright wins.

Owing to the cool weather the Peterborough ball team will not practise to-night at Riverside Park, but there will be a full tournout to-morrow and Thursday nights, in preparation for Saturday's game at Cobourg.

It is stated that the Cobourg team, will import their former star twirler, Leo Downes from Toronto for the game against the Petes on Saturday. Floyd, the old Cobourg catcher, will be behind the bat.

There are many games before the Peterborough Midland League team. On Saturday they play in Cobourg, and on the following Saturday in Bowmanville. On Civic Holiday it is likely that the crack Eaton team of the Toronto City League, will be here for a double-header. On the Wednesday following, Aug. 16, the Petes will journey to Belleville for the return game with the Grand Trunks. A game with Lindsay is also under consideration and it is possible Manager Quinlan's team may go to Lindsay on Saturday, Aug. 12, although nothing definite has been settled yet.

Peterborough have won six out of seven Midland League games, their only defeat being in Bowmanville on July 7.

The destruction of the house fly is a public duty. Almost every American State Board of Health is carrying on a crusade against him.

His filthy origin and habits, and the fact that his body is generally laden with disease-producing germs, makes him one of the greatest enemies of the human race.

If the housekeepers of Canada will use persistently, this peril would be tremendously reduced.

FIGHT TO FINISH IS CONCLUSION OF CAUCUSES

Special to The Examiner

OTTAWA, JULY 25.—A Fight with a big F, fight to a finish, that was the result of caucuses of both political parties held this morning. The Conservatives met at ten o'clock and sat until nearly noon, when they broke up with hearty cheers for R. L. Borden.

The Liberals gathered from eleven to one. There was a unanimous determination to stick to the programme outlined by the Premier yesterday, in the Commons, in other words, the reciprocity agreement must be ratified or there must be an appeal to the country. This afternoon the Premier will propose the resumption to-morrow morning of morning sessions.

ANOTHER SUBSCRIPTION FOR FIRE SUFFERERS

The Examiner is pleased to acknowledge the receipt of $18.50 from the Gilmour Memorial Church to the fund for the relief of the Porcupine fire sufferers. As will be seen from a despatch in another column to-day there is still need of funds in the North. Although the scarcity of provisions has been relieved the survivors have no money with which to purchase the necessities of life. The Examiner fund consists now of $59.50.

REV. MR. TRUMPOUR'S APPOINTMENT

Rev. H. R. Trumpour, rector of All Saints' church, on Sunday announced that he had been appointed as a professor of Bishop Latimer College, Vancouver, B.C., and that therefore he would be compelled to tender his resignation as rector of All Saints'. The new appointment is an important one and a fitting recognition of Rev. Mr. Trumpour's ability.

REACHES HIS 93RD BIRTHDAY

Mr. Alex. Edwards, Stewart street, is to be congratulated upon reaching his 93rd birthday and in possession of good health. The greater portion of this time he has been a resident of what is now the city of Peterborough. His many friends wish him many more years of happy and honoured old age.

Bridge Closed To Traffic

Yesterday's wind storm was so severe as to put the Pigeon Creek Bridge again out of commission. It is in bad shape and reports say that it will not be ready for service inside of at least two weeks.

"BREMEN" HAS SAILED

Special to The Examiner:

MONTREAL, JULY 25.—While London gossiped about the possibility of war with Germany, the German cruiser "Bremen," which has been docked here for a week or so, provisioned with Canadian provisions, and coaled with Canadian coal, slipped peacefully away from this city this morning, down the St. Lawrence River, under sealed orders for somewhere, presumably the riotous Hayti. The German sailors were very popular here.

HAD A DUCKING

KEENE, JULY 25.—The first miraculous escape recorded here this season from drowning, happened on Wednesday afternoon to one of our prominent citizens, Mr. Wm. Miller. He had just reached deep water with all the necessary fishing accoutrements, and his well-balanced mind, no doubt feasting on the fine catch of fish he would get, when very unexpectedly his craft turned turtle, precipitating him into deep water, and only for his great ability as a strong swimmer, also the assistance of Bert McIntyre and Wm. Wedlock, who made no delay in reaching the place of accident, Mr. Miller, no doubt, would have had a very hard fight for his life. His boat floated quite a piece down the river and after searching it he went on his way rejoicing, apparently none the worse for his dip. A very fortunate thing was that none of his family knew of his perils till all was over.

GIVES UP CONTRACT

There will be a meeting of the Board of Works to-night for the purpose of deciding what is to be done in connection with the pumping station of the South City sewer system. It will be remembered that Mr. Ed. Conroy, who was originally awarded the contract, asked to be relieved of it, owing to illness after a considerable part of the work had been done, and it was turned over to Mr. Jas. Bogue. The latter has been carrying on the work for some time, but has now thrown up the job.

Wires Crossed

The high wind which prevailed this morning was responsible for the intermittent ringing of the bell over the town clock. The crossing of the wires is supposed to have been the indirect cause of the trouble.

CROPS ARE LIGHT

The crops between Peterborough and Toronto are very light. There will be a large acreage that will barely pay for the labour expended on it. The above is a statement, which was made to the Examiner by a local gentleman who recently made a trip between Toronto and Peterborough.

ELECTION CERTAIN

Both Parties in Caucus Declare It Inevitable—Appeal Will be Made to the Country About End of September

YESTERDAY IN HOUSE

Ottawa, July 26.—While the Conservative minority in the Commons were deciding in caucus yesterday morning to continue the present obstructive tactics on the reciprocity issue, and compel the Government to appeal to the country to break the deadlock, the Liberal majority in the House, also gathered in caucus, were enthusiastically and unanimously deciding to accept the challenge and fight the issue out at the polls. The decision of both sides was for an election as speedily as possible. Members on both sides are tired of the present farcical waste of time in the House, and want to get away to their constituencies to plunge at once into active campaign work.

Yesterday's caucuses dispelled any hope of a compromise being reached that might avert an election. On the Liberal side there was no question of any receding from the attitude consistently adhered to for the past six months, namely, to stand or fall by the reciprocity agreement. There was not a single waverer in the rank. On the Opposition side it was also decided to adhere to the anti-reciprocity policy to the bitter end.

The general election will follow just as soon as the voters' lists can be got ready, and the other legal preliminaries observed. The last week in September or the first week in October should see the vote taken and the people's answer given.

After Monday the sitting of the House of Commons yesterday was quiet in contrast, although crowded galleries suggested another outbreak of hostilities.

The reciprocity discussion was resumed after Mr. Monk's amendment had been declared lost on a division.

W. R. Smythe (East Algoma) continued the animadversion against the pact and the lack of information at the possession of the Ministers in not protecting Canada against the importation of cheap southern lumber.

Major S. Sharpe (North Ontario) made a careful analysis of the negotiations and said there was a fallacy in one Minister telling the farmers that reciprocity would give them higher prices for their products, and another Minister saying to the manufacturers that their market would be increased and prices enhanced.

On the motion by the Premier for morning sessions Dr. Sproule made inquiry as to the time to be devoted to the consideration of private bills in committee and the House.

"It is the intention of the Government to go on with the measure which is before the House," said Sir Wilfrid, "that is, with the reciprocity agreement. Everything else depends upon that," was Sir Wilfrid's ultimatum.

Hon. Sydney Fisher, in reply to a question by Mr Borden, said that the resignation of Dr J. G. Rutherford, chief Dominion veterinary, was in his hands.

R. L. Borden asked the Secretary of State for a detailed report showing what progress has been made with the preparation of the voters' lists.

Hon. Charles Murphy promised to have a report prepared.

Col. Talbot of Bellechasse took exception to an article in The Montreal Gazette, in which it was stated that the French-Canadian members are in a state of revolt and object to having to remain at Ottawa now that their sessional indemnity has expired. He said the story was both contemptible and malicious, and that a sense of duty would keep the French-Canadian members at Ottawa just as long without pay as it would other members.

Mr. Lapointe of Kamouraska said about the same thing in French and was loudly cheered.

Mr. Arthurs, Parry Sound, read a report in the press saying that the elections in Northern Ontario would be deferred because it would not be possible to prepare the lists in time.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that the elections would be held according to law.

Major Currie was not satisfied with this reply, and Sir Wilfrid explained that under the statutes the polling could be postponed in certain constituencies, but that these did not include any constituencies in Northern Ontario.

Claude Macdonnel (South Toronto) asked if an order-in-council had been passed removing restrictions on American laborers, so as to facilitate their entry into Canada during the harvest period.

Mr. Oliver explained that there are no restrictions imposed on farm laborers except such as are imposed by statute, and these could not be removed by order-in-council. He explained that farm laborers are not required to possess a certain sum of money.

Toledo, O., July 26.—Embarking in a sixteen-foot naphtha launch Saturday afternoon for a trip of 24 hours to a small island in Lake Erie, six Toledoans have since been lost sight of. The occupants of the launch were Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kennedy, their son aged 7, and daughter, Pearl, aged 20, and Mr. and Mrs. Mason.

LIVES TO TELL IT

Bobby Leach Goes Safely Over the Horseshoe Falls Although He is Badly Shaken Up

MAY BE ARRESTED

Niagara Falls, Ont., July 26.—In his steel barrel Bobby Leach successfully made the trip over the Horseshoe Falls yesterday afternoon. Beyond a number of bruises and a severe shaking up he was uninjured by the drop of 158 feet. He is in bed at his home here to-day.

This was the second time the falls trip has been successfully made. Mrs. Anna Edson Taylor accomplished the feat on Oct. 24, 1901. Mrs. Taylor witnessed Leach's trip, and as the barrel made its frightful plunge she remarked to a friend that she feared the intrepid little Englishman would never come out of the craft alive.

It was just 2.55 o'clock when the barrel was cut adrift off Navy Island. It was towed into position by a rowboat and started on its perilous journey down the tossing waters of the upper rapids to the cataract by cutting the towline. A strong wind was blowing and the river level was several feet above normal. Navigating the upper river in a rowboat in such a mood was extremely dangerous work.

When the barrel was cut adrift it was in the middle channel, but it had not gone a hundred yards on its journey before it took a course nearer the Canadian shore. It was within fifty feet of the mainland when it passed the plant of the Electrical Development Co. Less than a mile above the cataract the barrel was caught by currents and swung away from the Canadian shore. When it took the plunge over the falls at 3.13 o'clock it was fully 100 feet from shore.

Striking great billows at the brink of the cataract, the barrel was lost to view for a moment as it started on its plunge. Then watchers on the shore saw it reappear between rifts in the spray. When it struck the water its sharp nose burrowed into the lower river and for a twinkling the craft remained under water, only to leap from the water with the force of the rebound.

The barrel remained in the lower river 22 minutes before the manhole was opened and Leach stuck his head to the shoulders through the opening. He waved his hat to the spectators. When the barrel was caught in an eddy near the Canadian shore Frank Bender of Chippawa, swam out and grasped it. Within two minutes more in a rowboat began towing it ashore.

"That was hell, boys!" were Leach's first words as he shook hands with Bender, after the towline had been attached.

When Leach was removed from the barrel it was thought that he had sustained a broken leg and he was removed to his home on a stretcher. Dr. F. W. Wilson made an examination and declared that Leach's left leg was severely strained and cut on the knee almost to the bone, which made the injury very painful.

Leach was accompanied on his trip home by his wife, who had witnessed the plunge over the falls at Table Rock. Before he was carried to his room he fondled his three-year-old daughter Pearl, the child crying with joy at the sight of her father. In spite of her youth, Pearl has twice before taken a keen interest in Bobby's perilous adventures, having twice seen her father make the trip through the whirlpool rapids in a barrel.

Police Waiting.

Toronto, July 26.—The question of whether Bobby Leach left the Canadian side of the Falls or the American side on his barrel trip will likely be an important matter for him to answer one of these days. The whole proceedings look to the coldly disapproving eye of J. E. Rogers, superintendent of provincial police, like attempted suicide.

"We can't countenance such a thing as a man deliberately wanting to take his own life," said Mr. Rogers last night. "If he left the American side he has committed no offence in Canada, but if he left from the Canadian side, we will take whatever action the Attorney-General sees fit to order."

Will Spend Six Millions.

Minneapolis, July 26.—The Soo line and Baltimore & Ohio roads will come into close relationship in the Chicago traffic field in a plan by which the Soo will spend $6,000,000 for a direct entrance into and terminals in Chicago. Soo line or Wisconsin Central passenger trains will no longer use the Illinois Central passenger station on the lake front in Chicago when the plan is complete, but will enter instead the Grand Central passenger station owned by the Baltimore & Ohio. Freight terminals of the Soo will adjoin the Baltimore & Ohio freight terminals.

Announcement yesterday of Chicago terminal plans of the Soo are believed to account for the recent protracted visit of President Fred D. Underwood, of the Erie road, to Montreal, where he had repeated long conferences with Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, president of the Canadian Pacific. It is suggested in railway circles here that the program of the Soo sent the Erie's president to Montreal to head off, through Canadian Pacific influence or in some manner modify, if possible, the proposed Soo plan, and that he failed to accomplish his purpose.

Pope's Health.

Rome, July 26.—The condition of the Pope, who is suffering from a sore throat, was less satisfactory yesterday, with a temperature higher than that of the day before, when a slight rise above the normal was noted. The general symptoms, however, are not alarming.

Missionary Convention.

Woodstock, Ont., July 26.—The first annual Woodstock conference of the Young People's Missionary Movement of the United States and Canada opened in Woodstock College with a goodly representation of delegates present. Monday night's meeting was in charge of Rev. Dr. MacKay, D.D., general secretary of Presbyterian Missions, and moderator of the general assembly, who gave the opening address. Among those expected to take part in the proceedings this week are Morris W. Ennes, New York, editorial secretary, Young People's Missionary Movement; Rev. J. G. Brown, D.D., secretary Baptist foreign mission board; Rev. Canon S. Gould, M.D., secretary, missionary society of the Church of England in Canada; Rev. F. C. Stephenson, Methodist Young Peoples' missionary secretary.

Suing Steamboat Company.

Kingston, July 26.—Action has been brought against the St. Lawrence River Steamboat Co. by Inez F. Shangraw for $2,000 damages, alleged to have been caused by falling over the hood protecting the wheel shaft of the steamer America.

Struck by Lightning.

Napierville, July 26.—Paul Perrons' barn and stables were struck by lightning Monday afternoon and burned to the ground, with sixty tons of hay, two head of cattle, and farm implements. Loss $1,500. No insurance.

More Carpenters Out.

Montreal, July 26.—Called out by the union, forty carpenters employed in the construction of the harbor commissioners' new grain elevator, near the Victoria pier, joined the carpenters' movement yesterday morning, demanding a minimum rate of 35 cents per hour and a nine hour day.

The strike, it was stated by the foreman, is not delaying the progress of work on the elevator as there are upwards of 200 carpenters still on the job. Many of these are non-union men, while others, although members, refused to obey the order to strike. The carpenters engaged on the new elevator are drawing from 27 1-2 to 32 cents an hour, each man being paid according to his ability.

STICK TO LEADER

Balfour Advises the Lords to Keep to Lord Lansdowne—Split the Worst Evil That Could Befall the Unionists

EXCITEMENT CONTINUES

London, July 26.—Another exciting day of political conferences, party caucuses and Ministerial visits to the King left the crisis no better solved than on Monday. There was renewed flinging of epithets in the House of Commons yesterday. The only significant incident of the session was that F. E. Smith, one of the leaders in Monday's turmoil, quit his accustomed seat among the adherents of Balfour and ranged himself with Lord Hugh Cecil and other insurgent unionists.

The most important event of the day was the publication of a letter which Mr. Balfour wrote to Lord Newton in reply to a request for his opinion on the situation. As was expected he fully supports Lord Lansdowne in bowing to the inevitable and avoiding the creation of peers. Thus the rupture in the Unionist party is definite and open.

In part the leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons says:

"I never conceived it to be part of my duty actively to intervene in the affairs of a House to which I do not belong, nor have I on the present occasion taken any share in the propaganda, which, I understand, is being vigorously conducted by some of its members. This is not because I have any doubts as to the advice which I ought to give those who seek it. On the contrary, my views are clear.

"I think that the majority in the House of Lords should support its leader. I agree with the advice Lord Lanadowne has given this friends. With Lord Lansdowne I stand, with Lord Lansdowne I am ready, if need be, to fall."

The present crisis has been seized upon by Mr. Balfour. This time the attempt is more likely to succeed because it has the assistance of a similar movement in the House of Lords to dethrone Lansdowne in favor of the Earl Halsbury. But Mr. Balfour has weathered similar storms before.

The "no surrender" party is practically identical with the extreme protectionist party of recent times, which was equally dissatisfied with Mr. Balfour's leadership in the fiscal controversy and the chief point of interest to-day is not the fate of the veto bill, which already is known, but whether Mr. Balfour will be able to reunite his party.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

The visit of the British Atlantic fleet to Norway was postponed.

A French army officer resigned his office on a question over national defence.

A student of physico-psychical phenomena says that the human soul has a definite weight.

The infant child of Mr. J. J. Wilkinson of Oshawa was drowned by the upsetting of a boat near Windermere.

Capt. Wellc's boat, the Romania, on which he started to cross the ocean to Queenstown, was wrecked at Chebogue Point, N.S.

Over $90,000,000 worth of minerals were produced in Ontario last year, which is 40 per cent. of the production of the whole Dominion.

Both parties held caucuses at Ottawa, and the prospects for a general election somewhere about the last week in September were strengthened.

Armed with a rifle and carrying a letter addressed to President Taft and the British consul, N. Lusane, 25 years old, ran amuck in the crowded streets of Chicago last night. Eight men were wounded.

A New York subway express train, running at top speed, caught three electricians in its path yesterday afternoon, fatally injuring one and sent the other two spinning through the air for fifty feet.

A Harrowing Trip.

Chatham, Ont., July 26.—The three Labadie brothers and party of Detroit arrived at the Thames River lighthouse yesterday morning with a harrowing tale of experience on Lake St. Clair. They were towed about in a disabled motor boat from early Sunday night till late Monday night. They had cruised to the Log Cabin Inn on Sunday, and had finished the biggest part of the return trip to Detroit when the motor stalled within sight of the Detroit River lights. They were pitched about in a rough sea and drifted clear across the lake to Mitchell's Bay in the storm.

Approved Wool Bill.

Washington, July 26.—Democratic members of the House in caucus approved by a two-thirds majority late yesterday the bill reducing the duties on cotton manufactures nearly one-half.

HYDRO WINS IN HAMILTON.

After a Hard Struggle Cataract Company Loses Bylaw.

Hamilton, July 26.—The greatest fight ever made against Hydro-Electric power came to an unsuccessful conclusion here yesterday when the Hydro bylaw carried by a majority of 439.

The campaign put up by the Cataract Power Co. in opposition to the measure was perfectly organized and must have cost considerable. On the other hand, the Hydro forces had practically no organization and a campaign fund of only $400.

Every carriage, auto or buggy in Hamilton capable of bringing votes to the polls was secured by the Cataract Company two months ago. Long lines of empty rigs hired by the Cataract Company stood in front of the polling booths, while the Hydro voters were forced to walk to the voting places.

At every polling place there were at least three scrutineers for the Cataract, while at many of them the Hydro had none at all.

Two or three autos that came from Toronto and the rigs of a few local sympathizers who had refused to "sell out" were the only resources of the Hydro party.

For the last six weeks Cataract canvassers have called upon every voter. A tremendous increase in taxes was of course the chief argument of the canvassers. It was also threatened that the necessary car line extensions would not be made.

During the last few days of the fight the Cataract Company covered the town with placards and notices, all attempting to persuade the citizens away from the bylaw.

Under these circumstances the Hydro victory was an important one.

Accepted Sentence.

New York, July 26.—The Federal Government yesterday scored heavily in its effort to break up the alleged "wire trust," when thirty-seven of the eighty-three men indicted June 29 withdrew the plea of "not guilty" and accepted sentence without trial on pleas of "nolo contendere."

Upon this passive admission of guilt, Judge Archibald, in the U. S. District Court, imposed fines of from $1,000 to $1,700 and costs in each case.

Pertinent Query.

"Our motto," said the suffragette, "is 'Forward!'"

"If that's the case," said her husband, who was sewing a button on his coat, "why is it that you always get off a car backward?"—Chicago News.

Satisfied Customers
There is a notable increase in my business. I expect it from the class of work I am doing. I do not expect to get all the optical business in the city, any more than one shoe store could sell all the shoes, but my aim is to obtain patronage enough to keep me reasonably busy and to give such satisfaction that my optical patrons will be indelibly fixed in the minds of those who desire the best at moderate prices.
It is very gratifying to note that much of my patronage has come from parties who have been recommended to me by pleased customers. Hence I want more customers to please.
My business methods will never be of the catch penny variety. I want to give a dollar's worth for every dollar I receive, and when I know of any plan whereby I can give a better dollar's worth than I am now doing, I shall adopt the plan. My main object in writing this ad is to get you to visit me.

Mr. Arthurs, Parry Sound, read a report in the press saying that the elections in Northern Ontario would be deferred because it would not be possible to prepare the lists in time.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that the elections would be held according to law.

Major Currie was not satisfied with this reply, and Sir Wilfrid explained that under the statutes the polling could be postponed in certain constituencies, but that these did not include any constituencies in Northern Ontario.

Claude Macdonnel (South Toronto) asked if an order-in-council had been passed removing restrictions on American laborers, so as to facilitate their entry into Canada during the harvest period.

Mr. Oliver explained that there are no restrictions imposed on farm laborers except such as are imposed by statute, and these could not be removed by order-in-council. He explained that farm laborers are not required to possess a certain sum of money.

Six May Have Drowned.

Bobby Leach Goes Safely Over the Horseshoe Falls Although He is Badly Shaken Up

MAY BE ARRESTED

Niagara Falls, Ont., July 26.—In his steel barrel Bobby Leach successfully made the trip over the Horseshoe Falls yesterday afternoon. Beyond a number of bruises and a severe shaking up he was uninjured by the drop of 158 feet. He is in bed at his home here to-day.

This was the second time the falls trip has been successfully made. Mrs. Anna Edson Taylor accomplished the feat on Oct. 24, 1901. Mrs. Taylor witnessed Leach's trip, and as the barrel made its frightful plunge she remarked to a friend that she feared the intrepid little Englishman would never come out of the craft alive.

It was just 2.55 o'clock when the barrel was cut adrift off Navy Island. It was towed into position by a rowboat and started on its perilous journey down the tossing waters of the upper rapids to the cataract by cutting the towline. A strong wind was blowing and the river level was several feet above normal. Navigating the upper river in a rowboat in such a mood was extremely dangerous work.

When the barrel was cut adrift it was in the middle channel, but it had not gone a hundred yards on its journey before it took a course nearer the Canadian shore. It was within fifty feet of the mainland when it passed the plant of the Electrical Development Co. Less than a mile above the cataract the barrel was caught by currents and swung away from the Canadian shore. When it took the plunge over the falls at 3.13 o'clock, it was fully 100 feet from shore.

Striking great billows at the brink of the cataract, the barrel was lost to view for a moment as it started on its plunge. Then watchers on the shore saw it reappear between rifts in the spray. When it struck the water its sharp nose burrowed into the lower river and for a twinkling the craft remained under water, only to leap from the water with the force of the rebound.

The barrel remained in the lower river 22 minutes before the manhole was opened and Leach stuck his head to the shoulders through the opening. He waved his hat to the spectators. When the barrel was caught in an eddy near the Canadian shore Frank Bender of Chippawa, swam out and grasped it. Within two minutes more in a rowboat began towing it ashore.

"That was hell, boys!" were Leach's first words as he shook hands with Bender, after the towline had been attached.

When Leach was removed from the barrel it was thought that he had sustained a broken leg and he was removed to his home on a stretcher. Dr. F. W. Wilson made an examination and declared that Leach's left leg was severely strained and cut on the knee almost to the bone, which made the injury very painful.

Leach was accompanied on his trip home by his wife, who had witnessed the plunge over the falls at Table Rock. Before he was carried to his room he fondled his three-year-old daughter Pearl, the child crying with joy at the sight of her father. In spite of her youth, Pearl has twice before taken a keen interest in Bobby's perilous adventures, having twice seen her father make the trip through the whirlpool rapids in a barrel.

Police Waiting.

Toronto, July 26.—The question of whether Bobby Leach left the Canadian side of the Falls or the American side on his barrel trip will likely be an important matter for him to answer one of these days. The whole proceedings look to the coldly disapproving eye of J. E. Rogers, superintendent of provincial police, like attempted suicide.

"We can't countenance such a thing as a man deliberately wanting to take his own life," said Mr. Rogers last night. "If he left the American side he has committed no offence in Canada, but if he left from the Canadian side, we will take whatever action the Attorney-General sees fit to order."

Will Spend Six Millions.

Minneapolis, July 26.—The Soo line and Baltimore & Ohio roads will come into close relationship in the Chicago traffic field in a plan by which the Soo will spend $6,000,000 for a direct entrance into and terminals in Chicago. Soo line or Wisconsin Central passenger trains will no longer use the Illinois Central passenger station on the lake front in Chicago when the plan is complete, but will enter instead the Grand Central passenger station owned by the Baltimore & Ohio. Freight terminals of the Soo will adjoin the Baltimore & Ohio freight terminals.

Announcement yesterday of Chicago terminal plans of the Soo are believed to account for the recent protracted visit of President Fred D. Underwood, of the Erie road, to Montreal, where he had repeated long conferences with Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, president of the Canadian Pacific. It is suggested in railway circles here that the program of the Soo sent the Erie's president to Montreal to head off, through Canadian Pacific influence or in some manner modify, if possible, the proposed Soo plan, and that he failed to accomplish his purpose.

Pope's Health.

Rome, July 26.—The condition of the Pope, who is suffering from a sore throat, was less satisfactory yesterday, with a temperature higher than that of the day before, when a slight rise above the normal was noted. The general symptoms, however, are not alarming.

Missionary Convention.

Woodstock, Ont., July 26.—The first annual Woodstock conference of the Young People's Missionary Movement of the United States and Canada opened in Woodstock College with a goodly representation of delegates present. Monday night's meeting was in charge of Rev. Dr. MacKay, D.D., general secretary of Presbyterian Missions, and moderator of the general assembly, who gave the opening address. Among those expected to take part in the proceedings this week are Morris W. Ennes, New York, editorial secretary, Young People's Missionary Movement; Rev. J. G. Brown, D.D., secretary Baptist foreign mission board; Rev. Canon S. Gould, M.D., secretary, missionary society of the Church of England in Canada; Rev. F. C. Stephenson, Methodist Young Peoples' missionary secretary.

Suing Steamboat Company.

Kingston, July 26.—Action has been brought against the St. Lawrence River Steamboat Co. by Inez F. Shangraw for $2,000 damages, alleged to have been caused by falling over the hood protecting the wheel shaft of the steamer America.

Struck by Lightning.

Naperville, July 26.—Paul Perrons' barn and stables were struck by lightning Monday afternoon and burned to the ground, with sixty tons of hay, two head of cattle, and farm implements. Loss $1,500. No insurance.

More Carpenters Out.

Montreal, July 26.—Called out by the union, forty carpenters employed in the construction of the harbor commissioners' new grain elevator, near the Victoria pier, joined the carpenters' movement yesterday morning, demanding a minimum rate of 35 cents per hour and a nine hour day.

The strike, it was stated by the foreman, is not delaying the progress of work on the elevator as there are upwards of 200 carpenters still on the job. Many of these are non-union men, while others, although members, refused to obey the order to strike. The carpenters engaged on the new elevator are drawing from 27 1-2 to 32 cents an hour, each man being paid according to his worth.

Balfour Advises the Lords to Keep to Lord Lansdowne—Split the Worst Evil That Could Befall the Unionists

EXCITEMENT CONTINUES

London, July 26.—Another exciting day of political conferences, party caucuses and Ministerial visits to the King left the crisis no better solved than on Monday. There was renewed flinging of epithets in the House of Commons yesterday. The only significant incident of the session was that F. E. Smith, one of the leaders in Monday's turmoil, quit his accustomed seat among the adherents of Balfour and ranged himself with Lord Hugh Cecil and other insurgent unionists.

The most important event of the day was the publication of a letter which Mr. Balfour wrote to Lord Newton in reply to a request for his opinion on the situation. As was expected he fully supports Lord Lansdowne in bowing to the inevitable and avoiding the creation of peers. Thus the rupture in the Unionist party is definite and open.

In part the leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons says:

"I never conceived it to be part of my duty actively to intervene in the affairs of a House to which I do not belong, nor have I on the present occasion taken any share in the propaganda, which, I understand, is being vigorously conducted by some of its members. This is not because I have any doubts as to the advice which I ought to give those who seek it. On the contrary, my views are clear.

"I think that the majority in the House of Lords should support its leader. I agree with the advice Lord Lansdowne has given his friends. With Lord Lansdowne I stand, with Lord Lansdowne I am ready, if need be, to fall."

The present crisis has been seized upon by Mr. Balfour. This time the attempt is more likely to succeed because it has the assistance of a similar movement in the House of Lords to dethrone Lansdowne in favor of the Earl Halsbury. But Mr. Balfour has weathered similar storms before.

The "no surrender" party is practically identical with the extreme protectionist party of recent times, which was equally dissatisfied with Mr. Balfour's leadership in the fiscal controversy and the chief point of interest to-day is not the fate of the veto bill, which already is known, but whether Mr. Balfour will be able to reunite his party.

A Harrowing Trip.

Chatham, Ont., July 26.—The three Labadie brothers and party of Detroit arrived at the Thames River lighthouse yesterday morning with a harrowing tale of experience on Lake St. Clair. They were towed about in a disabled motor boat from early Sunday night till late Monday night. They had cruised to the Log Cabin Inn on Sunday, and had finished the biggest part of the return trip to Detroit when the motor stalled within sight of the Detroit River lights. They were pitched about in a rough sea and drifted clear across the lake to Mitchell's Bay in the storm.

HYDRO WINS IN HAMILTON.

After a Hard Struggle Cataract Company Loses Bylaw.

Hamilton, July 26.—The greatest fight ever made against Hydro-Electric power came to an unsuccessful conclusion here yesterday when the Hydro bylaw carried by a majority of 439.

The campaign put up by the Cataract Power Co. in opposition to the measure was perfectly organized and must have cost considerable. On the other hand, the Hydro forces had practically no organization and a campaign fund of only $400.

Every carriage, auto or buggy in Hamilton capable of bringing votes to the polls was secured by the Cataract Company two months ago. Long lines of empty rigs hired by the Cataract Company stood in front of the polling booths, while the Hydro voters were forced to walk to the voting places.

At every polling place there were at least three scrutineers for the Cataract, while at many of them the Hydro had none at all.

Two or three autos that came from Toronto and the rigs of a few local sympathisers who had refused to "sell out" were the only resources of the Hydro party.

For the last six weeks Cataract canvassers have called upon every voter. A tremendous increase in taxes was of course the chief argument of the canvassers. It was also threatened that the necessary car line extensions would not be made.

During the last few days of the fight the Cataract Company covered the town with placards and notices, all attempting to persuade the citizens away from the bylaw.

Under these circumstances the Hydro victory was an important one.

Accepted Sentence.

New York, July 26.—The Federal Government yesterday scored heavily in its effort to break up the alleged "wire trust," when thirty-seven of the eighty-three men indicted June 20 withdrew the plea of "not guilty" and accepted sentence without trial on pleas of "nolo contendere."

Upon this passive admission of guilt, Judge Archibald, in the U. S. District Court, imposed fines of from $1,000 to $1,700 and costs in each case.

Pertinent Query.

It is very gratifying to note that much of my patronage has come from parties who have been recommended to me by pleased customers. Hence I want more customers to please.

READ THE EXAMINER

By JACK LONDON

In the morning Joan was roused by a great row and hullabaloo. Her first act was to reach for her revolver, but when she heard Noa Noah, who was on guard, laughing outside, she knew there was no danger, and went out to see the fun. Captain Young had landed Satan at the moment when the bridge-building gang had started along the beach. Satan was big and black, short-haired and muscular, and weighed fully seventy pounds. He did not love the blacks. Tommy Jones had trained him well, tying him up daily for several hours and telling off one or two black boys at a time to tease him. So Satan had it in for the whole black race, and the second after he landed on the beach the bridge-building gang was stampeding over the compound fence and swarming up the cocoanut palms.

"Good morning," Sheldon called from the veranda, "and what do you think of the nigger-chaser?"

"I'm thinking we have a task before us to train him into the house-boys," she called back.

"And to your Tahitians, too. Look out, Noah! Run for it!"

Satan, having satisfied himself that the tree perches were unassailable, was charging straight for the big Tahitian.

But Noah stood his ground, though somewhat irresolutely, and Satan, to every one's surprise, danced and frisked about him with laughing eyes and wagging tail.

"Now that is what I call a proper dog," was Joan's comment. "He is at least wiser than you, Mr. Sheldon. He didn't require any teaching to recognise the difference between a Tahitian and a black boy. What do you think, Noah? Why don't he bite you? He no savvee me Tahitian," he explained. "He savvee me, wear pants all the same white man."

"You'll have to give him a course in Sartor Resartus," Sheldon laughed, as he came down and began to make friends with Satan.

It chanced, just then, that Adamu Adam and Matauare, two of Joan's sailors, entered the coffpound from the far side-gate. They had been down to the Balesuna, making an alligator trap, and, instead of trousers, were clad in lava-lavas that flapped gracefully about their stalwart limbs. Satan saw them and advertised his find by breaking away from Sheldon's hands and charging.

He climbed up the platform that supported the galvanised-iron tanks which held the water collected from the roof. Foiled here, Satan turned and charged back on Matauare.

"Run, Matauare! Run!" Joan called.

But he held his ground and waited the dog.

"He is The Fearless One—that is what his name means," Joan explained to Sheldon.

The Tahitian watched Satan, coolly, and when that sanguine-mouthed creature lifted into the air in the final leap, the man's hand shot out. It was a fair grip on the lower jaw, and Satan described a half-circle and was flung to the rear, turning over in the air and falling heavily on his back. Three times he leaped, and three times that grip on his jaws flung him to defeat. Then he contented himself with trotting at Mataure's heels, eyeing him and sniffing him suspiciously.

"It's all right, Satan; it's all right," Sheldon assured him. "That good fella belong along me."

But Satan dogged the Tahitian's movements for a full hour before he made up his mind that the man was an appurtenance of the place. Then he turned his attention to the three house-boys, cornering Ornâri in the kitchen and rushing him against the hot stove, stripping the lava-lava from Lalaperu when that excited youth climbed a veranda post, and following Viaburi on top the billiard-table where the battle raged until Joan managed a rescue.

CHAPTER IX.
AS BETWEEN A MAN AND A WOMAN

It was Satan's inexhaustible energy and good spirits that most impressed thef. His teeth seemed perpetually to ache with desire, and in lieu of black legs he husked the cocoanuts that fell from the trees in the compound, kept the enclosure clear of intruding hens, and made a hostile acquaintance with every boss-boy who came to report. He was unable to forget the torment of his puppyhood, wherein everlasting hatred of the black had been woven into the fibres of consciousness; and such a terror did he make himself that Sheldon was forced to shut him up in the living room when, for any reason, strange natives were permitted in the compound. This always hurt Satan's feelings and fanned his wrath so that even the house-boys had to watch out for him when he was first released.

Christian Young sailed away in the Minerva, carrying an invitation (that would be delivered nobody knew when) to Tommy Jones to drop in at Berande the next time he was passing.

"What are your plans when you get to Sydney?" Sheldon asked, that night, at dinner.

"First I've heard that I'm going to Sydney," Joan retorted. "I suppose you've received information, by bush-telegraph, that that third assistant understrapper and ex-sailorman at Tulagi is going to deport me as an undesirable immigrant."

"Oh, no, nothing of the sort, I assure you," Sheldon began with awkward haste, fearful of having offended, though he knew not how. "I was just wondering, that was all. You see, with the loss of the schooner and—and all the rest—you understand—I was thinkingthat if—a—if—hang it all, until you could communicate with your friends, my agents at Sydney could advance you a loan, temporary, you see, why I'd be only too glad and all the rest, you know. The proper—"

But his jaw dropped and he regarded her irritably and with apprehension.

"What is the matter?" he demanded, with a show of heat. "What have I done now?"

Joan's eyes were bright with battle, the curve of her lips sharp with mockery.

"Certainly not the unexpected," she said quietly. "Merely ignored me in your ordinary, everyday, mangod, superior fashion. Naturally it counted for nothing, my telling you that I had an idea of going to Sydney. Go to Sydney I must, because you, in your superior wisdom, have so decreed."

She paused and looked at him curiously, as though he were some strange breed of animal.

"Of course I am grateful for your offer of assistance; but even that is no salve to wounded pride. For that matter, it is no more than one white man should expect from another. Shipwrecked mariners are always helped along their way. Only this particular mariner doesn't need any help. Furthermore, this mariner is not going to Sydney, thank you."

"But what do you intend to do?"

"Find some spot where I shall escape the indignity of being patronised and bossed by the superior sex."

"Come, now, that is putting it a bit too strongly." Sheldon laughed, but the strain in his voice destroyed the effect of spontaneity. "You know yourself how impossible the situation is."

"I know nothing of the sort, sir. And if it is impossible, well, haven't I achieved it?"

"But it cannot continue. Really—"

"Oh, yes, it can. Having achieved it, I can go on achieving it. I intend to remain in the Solomons, but not on Berande. To-morrow I am going to take the whale-boat over to Pari-Sulay. I was talking with Captain Young about it. He says there are at least four hundred acres, and every foot of it good for planting. Being an island, he says I won't have to bother about wild pigs destroying the young trees. All I'll have to do is to keep the weeds hoed until the trees come into bearing. First, I'll buy the island; next, get forty or fifty recruits and start clearing and planting; and at the same time I'll run up a bungalow; and then you'll be relieved of my embarrassing presence—now don't say that it isn't."

"It is embarrassing," he said bluntly. "But you refuse to see my point of view, so there is no use in discussing it. Now please forget all about it, and consider me at your service concerning this—this project of yours. I know more about cocoanut-planting than you do. You speak like a capitalist. I don't know how much money you have, but I don't fancy you are rolling in wealth, as you Americans say. But I do know what it costs to clear land. Suppose the government sells your Pari-Sulay at a pound an acre; clearing will cost you at least four pounds more; that is five pounds for four hundred acres, or, say ten thousand dollars. Have you that much?"

She was keenly interested, and he could see that the previous clash between them was already forgotten. Her disappointment was plain as she confessed:

"No, I haven't quite eight thousand dollars."

"Then here's another way of looking at it: You'll need, as you said, at least fifty boys. Not counting premiums, their wages are thirty dollars a year."

"I pay my Tahitians fifteen a month," she interpolated.

"They won't do on straight plantation work. But to return. The wages of fifty boys each year will come to three hundred pounds—that is, fifteen hundred dollars. Very w ell. It will be seven years before your trees begin to bear. Seven times fifteen hundred is ten thousand five hundred dollars—more than you possess, and all eaten up by the boys' wages, with nothing to pay for bungalow, building, tools, quinine, trips to Sydney, and so forth."

Sheldon shook his head gravely. "You'll have to abandon the idea."

"But I won't go to Sydney," she cried. "I simply won't. I'll buy in to the extent of my money as a small partner in some other plantation. Let me buy in in Berande?"

"Heaven forbid!" he cried in such genuine dismay that she broke into hearty laughter.

"There, I won't tease you. Really, you know, I'm not accustomed to forcing my presence where it is not desired. Yes, yes; I know you're just aching to point out that I've forced myself upon you ever since I landed, only you are too polite to say so. Yet as you said yourself, it was impossible for me to go away, as I had to stay. You wouldn't let me go to Tulagi. You compelled me to force myself upon you. But I won't buy in as partner with anyone. I'll buy Pari-Sulay, but I'll put only ten boys on it and clear slowly. Also I'll invest in some old ketch and take out a trading license. For that matter, I'll go recruiting on Malaita."

She looked for protest, and found it in Sheldon's clenched hand and in every line of his clean-cut face.

"Go ahead and say it," she challenged. "Please don't mind me. I'm—I'm getting used to it, you know. Really I am."

"I wish I were a woman so as to tell you how preposterously insane and impossible it is," he blurted out.

She surveyed him with deliberation, and said:

"Better than that, you are a man. So there is nothing to prevent your telling me, for I demand to be considered as a man. I didn't come down here to trail my woman's skirts over the Solomons. Please forget that I am accidentally anything else than a man with a man's living to make."

Inwardly Sheldon fumed and fretted. Was she making game of him? Or did there lurk in her the insidious unhealthfulness of unwomanliness? Or was it merely a case of blank, staring, sentimental, idiotic innocence?

"I have told you," he began stiffly "that recruiting on Malaita is impossible for a woman, and that is all I care to say—or dare."

"And I tell you, in turn, that it is nothing of the sort. I've sailed the Miele here, master, if you please, all the way from Tahiti—even if I did lose her, which was the fault of your Admiralty charts. I am a navigator and that is more than your Solomon captains are. Captain Young told me all about it. And I am a sea man—a better seaman than you, when it comes right down to it, and you know it. I can shoot. I am not a fool. I can take care of myself. And I shall most certainly buy a ketch, run her myself, and go recruiting on Malaita."

Sheldon made a hopeless gesture.

"That's right," she rattled on. "Wash your hands of me. But as Von used to say, "Von just watch my smoke!"

"There's no use in discussing it. Let us have some music."

He arose and went over to the big phonograph; but before the disk started, and while he was winding the machine, he heard her saying:

"I suppose you've been accustomed to Jane Eyres all your life. That's why you don't understand me. Come on, Satan; let's leave him to his old music."

He watched her morosely and with out intention of speaking, till he saw her take a rifle from the stand, examine the magazine, and start for the door.

"Where are you going?" he asked peremptorily.

"As between man and woman," she answered, "it would be too terribly—or—indecent for you to tell me why I shouldn't go alligatoring. Good night. Sleep well."

He shut off the phonograph with a snap, started toward the door after her, then abruptly flung himself into a chair.

"You're hoping a 'gator catches me, aren't you?" she called from the veranda, and as she went down the steps her rippling laughter drifted tantalizingly back through the wide doorway.

Eczema Worse in the Spring

The Blood is Watery—Difficult to Get the Healing Process Started.

But Whatever the Cause You Can Relieve the Itching and Heal the Sores With

Dr. Chase's Ointment

Salt rheum and eczema are usually worse at this time of year because of the sudden change of temperature and the watery condition of the blood.

It is not necessary to refer to the suffering caused from the intense itching nor to the tendency of these ailments. The essential point is how to bring about cure, and if you have been reading the cures reported from time to time in this paper you will already know that there is nothing like Dr. Chase's Ointment as a cure for eczema, salt rheum, psoriasis and every form of itching skin diseases.

This ointment stops the itching almost as soon as applied, lessens the discharge from the vesicles or blisters, cleans out the morbid growth and stimulates the process of healing.

Because other treatments have failed, you may feel discouraged. But in Dr. Chase's Ointment there is a cure for you. We know this because of the reports we have received from so many thousands of cases.

For instance, there is the cure of Mrs. Nettie Massey, of Consecon, Ont., who had psoriasis or chronic eczema so bad that almost the whole body was covered with sores, and three doctors failed to cure her. One doctor said she could never be cured. Write to Mrs. Massey about her case.

THE CURSE OF THE NATION IS CONSTIPATION

Fruit-a-tives" Alone Cures This Disease

A famous scientist states that Constipation, or non-action of the bowels, causes more deaths than all other diseases combined. Constipation inflames the kidneys, ruins digestion, is the foundation of Rheumatism, poisons the blood, causes Headaches, Neuralgia, Nervousness and Insomnia.

Constipation is caused by a weak or sluggish liver. Bile, the only purgative of the body, is secreted by the liver, which in turn should pour out into the intestines sufficient bile to move the bowels. Unless the liver is active, there cannot be enough bile to move the bowels regularly, and Constipation is the result.

"Fruit-a-tives", the famous fruit medicine, will always cure Constipation because it acts directly on the liver—relieves the congestion—increases the quantity of bile—and strengthens the bowel muscles.

PEOPLE'S PULPIT.

Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

God In the Home The World's Need

A Godless World of Godless Homes Is a Growing Danger.

Elmira, N.Y., July 23.—Pastor Russell delivered two addresses here today to crowded and attentive audiences. We report one on "God In The Home," from the text, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord" (Joshua xxiv, 15). The Pastor said:—Do not understand me to teach that the world's opportunity for life everlasting or death everlasting is now. "God hath appointed a Day in which He will judge the world," grant to world a judgment or trial or test. That great Day is future. It is the Day of Christ, a thousand years long. It will be a glorious opportunity. Present right doing and right thinking, or wrong doing and wrong thinking will have much to do with the condition of every man and woman at that time. He or she will enter upon that Day of blessing and opportunity either from a higher or a lower standpoint proportionately as he or she has acted wisely and conscientiously in the present time.

But nothing that the world can do can interfere with God's great proposition, that a full opportunity for life or death eternal shall then come to every member of the race because Christ died for the ungodly. The only class to whom present life means life or death eternal is the Church. And by the Church I mean, not church attendants nor outward professors, but those who have entered into a covenant with God through Christ and who have been made partakers of the Holy Spirit, tasting of the good Word of God and the powers of the Age to come. If these should fall away, the Apostle forewarns us, it would be impossible to renew them again unto repentance. And there will be no hope for them with the world, in the world's trial Day, because they already have enjoyed their share of the merit of Christ's death.

When, therefore, I speak of God and the home, I am not having in mind a family composed exclusively of saints, who daily and hourly are following their great Redeemer's footsteps in self-denial, in sacrifice, in the "narrow way" which leads to "glory, honor and immortality" and association with the Redeemer in His glorious Kingdom which is to bless the world for a thousand years.

My thought is that the Bible teaches that there are many people of the world, who are reverential, kind, gentle and just to a very considerable degree, who are not saints; who have not presented their bodies living sacrifices to God; who have not been begotten of His Holy Spirit, who are not, therefore, members of that exclusive "little flock" to whom it is the Father's good pleasure to give the Kingdom—in joint-heirship with their Lord and Redeemer and Head. To this latter class our Master evidently referred when He said to His footstep followers, "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven" (Matthew v, 16).

To live righteously, soberly and godly in this present world to the extent of one's ability is what everyone should do—no less. To live a life of sacrifice—to lay down our lives for the brethren, for the truth, in the service of the Lord, is another matter, which justice does not require and which the Bible nowhere enjoins upon mankind. It is pointed out as a privilege to those who desire it, and glory, honor and immortality on the spirit plane is the reward attached to this invitation or High Calling. It is the selection of this special class of consecrated ones that is the particular order of the Divine program at the present time.

Having clearly defined what we do not mean to teach, let me now assert that, nevertheless, every sensible man and woman, saintly or not, must feel a deep interest in the welfare and moral progress of the human family, of which he forms a part. All therefore, should rejoice in every movement and endeavor working to even temporary enlightenment, blessing and uplift amongst mankind. The many benevolent institutions of the civilized world attest this general thought. My only conflict with these humanitarian efforts is that they do not approach the subject of human betterment from what I consider to be the right standpoint. With nearly all of these efforts, more or less distinctly stated, are those God-dishonoring and love-opposing intimations of an alternative of torment, either purgatorial or eternal. This is the great blight which has worked and is working incalculable harm—driving intelligent minds into opposition to the true God and the Bible, which is the revelation of His Wisdom, Justice, Love and Power.

The Bible freely tells us that many features of the Divine plan are now hidden in mystery, but the last book of the Bible, which prophetically pictures the future, assures us that in God's due time "The mystery shall be finished, which He hath declared to His servants, the prophets" (Revelation x, 7). The same book assures us that in God's due time, when the mystery is cleared, "All nations shall come and worship before Thee, for Thy righteous acts have been made manifest" (Revelation xv, 4). We are now living in the time when the "mystery" is ending and the righteous dealings of God, from the Scriptural standpoint, may be clearly seen.

But these revelations are not meant for the world in general now, but merely for "the elect," the "sanctified in Christ Jesus." "To you it is given to know the mysteries"; to outsiders these things are spoken in parables and dark sayings (Matthew xiii, 11, 13). But not until the elect shall be glorified and the Messianic Kingdom established will the "mystery" be made fully known to the world and every knee bow and every tongue confess. Hence, only those of a contrite heart may now see, now understand, the real character of God, His real purposes toward man, etc. Thus our Lord declares, "This is life eternal that they should know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent" (John xvii, 3).

In a darker day than ours the theory, "to doubt is to be damned," held such a power over many that they dared not use their reason. And thus a certain reverence for God was maintained in many homes—a reverence, however, which surely would not be as highly appreciated by the Creator nor have as deep an influence upon the creature as would a faith moved by love and an intelligent appreciation of the Divine character, based upon an understanding of the Divine Plan of the Ages.

In our day the shackles of ignorance and superstition are breaking. Men, women and children are beginning to think for themselves. They no longer believe the fairy tales of other days; the dreadful hobgoblins and nightmares of the Dark Ages respecting purgatory and eternal torture are doubted by all, and by the great mass totally disbelieved. What have they now to attach them to the Almighty, since they have never been taught the love of God—the lengths and breadths and heights and depths, passing all human understanding? This is the world's great need — to know God as He really is, a Father, a Friend, a God of love! And to thus know Him the people need to be taught how seriously they were mistaught in the past along the lines of hell and purgatory.

How could they ever truly love and worship a God of injustice and of hate—One inferior to themselves—One who knew, foreordained and prepared for their torture, before they were born. They must see that these things taught by the creeds of the Dark Ages, are wholly at variance with the Bible, else they will never come back to the Bible nor be able to see its teachings in their true light. They must be taught that the sin and death, sorrow and trouble all around us are the wage or penalty of father Adam's disobedience. They must learn that God proposes a blessing and uplifting which will be as world wide as is the curse. They must learn that the foundation for this work was effected by the death of Jesus, the Just for the unjust. They must learn that God is now selecting a saintly class to be associates with the Redeemer in the work of uplifting and blessing Adam and his race; and that each will be held responsible and receive stripes in proportion to his knowledge and wilful disobedience; and that the persistently rebellious will be destroyed "like natural brute beasts," in the Second Death.

Not long since, in conversation with a young lady, she said with great concern, "I fear that I have lost my God." As a child of religious parents she had had helpful influences in her home, but in school she had come in contact with the general spirit of skepticism, which, instead of repudiating the Bible, as did Ingersoll, Paine and Voltaire, merely smiles at any reference to a Divine revelation, a faith in God and a respect for His will. These teachers are as honest, we believe, as were Ingersoll, Paine and Voltaire; nor can we deny that they have the same right to their disbelief that we claim for our belief. We can, however, say with all sincerity that it is a great pity that the learned men of Christendom are nearly all infidels, in the sense of not believing in the Bible as a Divine revelation.

Many of them even deny that there is a personal God and ascribe everything to—a great Nothing, which they designate Nature-god. Is it surprising, in view of the fact that these teachings are being promulgated in the universities and colleges and theological seminaries, in the high schools, and even to some extent in the common schools—is it any wonder that the rising generation is losing its God? If it even be claimed that a bad thing is better lost than kept, we must dissent from their course. We must claim that the misconception of God can be destroyed only by the introduction to the heart and mind of the true God, whose glorious attributes of Justice, Wisdom, Love and Power will take the place of the malevolent misconceptions of the Dark Ages.

It is high time that parents realize the true situation—it is almost too late now. The seeds of unbelief, already sown in the minds of the rising generation, are being watered continually and are growing. All who love their families, all who love mankind in general, should awaken to the fact that a world that has lost its God must of necessity be an unhappy world. Platonic philosophy may for a time serve the purposes of the few, but surely cannot serve the masses of our race. A godless world will ere long mean a discontented world, an unhappy world and, bye and bye, a world of anarchy and strife. This is what our world-wide education is leading to. Few of our race can stand an education which recognizes no God, no revelation of Him, no responsibility to Him, and no hope of a future life which will be effected by the conduct of the present.

We are not pleading for cant and rant. We are urging that in every home God be recognized to the extent of the opportunities and influences to enjoy. Parents have a special responsibility. Every father, in particular, as the head of his family, should recognize the Almighty Creator, and hold Him up to his family—"God First!" We need not urge upon God's consecrated people the privileges of prayer and the blessed influence which comes through prayer to the younger members of the family. This is one way of putting "God First." "In all thy ways acknowledge Him," or, as Joshua said: "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

Let us now step into your home and measure things there by the Golden Rule. As husbands, how do you treat your wives? As wives, how do you treat your husbands? Can you apply the Golden Rule to your words, to your conduct, to your demands of each other? Or do you act meanly, selfishly, taking advantage of each other, to the limit that the other will forbear? Do you deal with your children according to the lines of the Golden Rule? Are you an ideal parent, according to your own advanced standard of what a parent's duty should be to his children?

Do you remember that you have a responsibility for their training, a responsibility so far as your circumstances will permit, for their environment and happiness and education and general preparation for usefulness in life? Or are you indifferent to their interests, neglectful of your responsibilities? Do you recognize that your children have certain rights and that these increase as they near maturity, or are you forgetful of these, disposed to keep the children under the restraints of childhood, souring their dispositions and making them unhappy, until they resent the injustice and a family quarrel results?

As children, are you thoughtful of your parents, their welfare, their wishes, their happiness, as you would like your children to be thoughtful of yours? Do you remember the hours and weeks of feebleness and sickness and toil which you cost them in your infancy, and are you seeking to make their last days the happiest of their lives? Are you observing the Golden Rule toward your parents?

How is it in your relationship to your brothers and sisters? When they borrow your things without leave, do you retaliate by borrowing theirs without leave, and thus keep up a continual fret and vexation of spirit in the family? Or do you practice the Golden Rule of justice and do nothing to your brother and sister, or their belongings, that you would not wish them to do to you or your things?

All of the Lord's people are to love Him and the brethren; yea, even their enemies. However, let us now stop short of love and merely consider what the simple justice of the Golden Rule would imply in our conduct. How do our daily lives square with this Golden Rule of absolute justice, omitting love entirely?

If you are an employer, do you treat your employe in harmony with this rule and do unto him as you would have him do unto you, if your positions were reversed? If you are an employe, inquire of yourself, "Do I treat my employer and his business as I would have him treat me and my business, if our relationship were reversed?" Do you treat your butcher, your baker, your grocer, etc., as you would like to have them treat you, if your positions were reversed? Are you polite to them and not inclined to give them unnecessary trouble? Do you pay them promptly? Or if you are the tradesman, do you treat your customers as you would wish to have them treat you, if conditions were reversed? Do you charge them a reasonable price only? Do you give them proper weight and measure? Do you properly represent your goods to them, as you would have them represented to you? Are you a good neighbor? Do you see to it that your children are not a nuisance to others; that your chickens are not permitted to damage your neighbor's garden; that your dog is not a ferocious one, and that his bark does not keep the neighborhood awake? In a word, do you treat your neighbor justly, along the lines of the Golden Rule, doing unto him only as you would wish him to do to you?

He who is faithful in little things will be faithful in the greater ones. He who practices the Golden Rule during the six days of his contact with business will surely be faithful on the seventh, but faithfulness to the Golden Rule on the one day only will never win Divine approval.

In no way can we better honor and show our reverence for God than by following to the best of our ability His commands, which are just and righteous altogether.

Has a Future Anyway.

When the palatial train bearing the Borden touring party puffed into Estevan the other morning the first thing that met the gaze was a big streamer across the face of the station with the motto, "Estevan, the city of opportunities." A banner floated over the Town Hall declaring that Estevan was "the city with a future," which was quite true, because it certainly has no past. Estevan has not the distinction of possessing an oldest inhabitant. Five years ago it possessed a couple of elevators, the inevitable Bank of Montreal, a couple of general stores and a church. Now, it is throbbing with life, an orchestra plays at dinner time (evening dinner mind you) in the hotel, and next year a street railway will be running. All of which goes to show that you can't keep a good town down.

His Fortune.

"Who is that handsome young man standing over there?" inquired an old gentleman of a rich old lady at a party.

"That's my son-in-law. He's a very brilliant young man; made a large fortune by the law."

"Indeed!" said the old gentleman. "How's that?"

"The law made him my daughter's husband."—Answers.

Abolished the Lords.

By the Long Parliament the House of Lords was voted useless and was abolished in 1649.

When Knights Were Cold.

Monty Mollycoddle closed the window. Freddie Frostnair opened it. Then they frowned at each other.

"Do you mind lowering the window, old chap?" said Monty. "This weather's exceedingly treacherous, and on these chilly evenings one can't be too careful."

"Yes, but it's easier to kill oneself with a draft," observed Monty.

"Nonsense!" replied Freddie. "Look at all these modern cranks and compare them with our splendid ancestors. They don't stand comparison! And our ancestors didn't take medicines or stay in stuffy rooms or bind their necks with woolen comforters when they went out."

Worth Every Penny.

Sir James Crichton-Browne tells a new story of the railway tunnel. A friend of his once traveled in a first-class carriage, when they were not so well-lit as to-day, with a newly-married couple. On emerging from a long tunnel they "were very much in love," and "to minimize the confusion" (his own confusion, presumably) the superfluous third party said, "This tunnel cost $500,000." To this the bridegroom replied "It was well worth the money."

MONARCH KNIT

THEY can afford to beach their canoe and "spoon" on the shore — because they're clothed in "Monarch Knit." For evenings cool, on the water or the road, your money cannot buy nattier or more comfortable garments. "Monarch Knit" coats and sweaters, as well as auto caps and toques, have fairly won and fairly hold a big international market—

Because of select material, skilled craftsmanship and up-to-the-minute style and swagger knit into the garments and their very texture.

Every modern merchant knows the fundamental reasons for the superiority of the famous "Monarch Knit" line. Your merchant will gladly tell you all about these stunning garments—not because of big immediate profits, but because of after effects.

"Monarch Knit" coats and sweaters possess the marked individuality you like your garments to have. Comfort and style—the easy poise of the well-dressed lady or gentleman—the certainty that your lounging coat or sweater is a correct expression of fashion's latest decree—all that goes with "Monarch Knit." And then the price is reasonable — just what you expect to pay for garments that are worth while.

HOT QUARTERS

A Short Story.

BY JOS. E. REHAM

George and Kenneth Munson were enthusiastic bee farmers, and for the third season in succession were running an apiary in the woods, where the endless profusion of red raspberry bloom gave enormous crops of honey to the few bees there to gather it. They had spent every summer camped in the woods, and had so far done very good business. But the present season, which was the driest on record, threatened complete failure. The bees had gathered barely enough to live on, storing no surplus. The weather was hot and close, and the bees were cross, irritated by the honey failure and by the smoke in the air. It was painful and exasperating work to handle them, and toward the end of the month the apiarists gave up hope of securing a crop. George went home, leaving Kenneth to stay for another week or two, on the chance that rain might bring the blossoms forward again.

No rain came, although the sky was hazy and overcast, either with clouds or smoke. The bees grew intolerably vicious, stinging without provocation, and trying to rob one another's hives. Kenneth was thoroughly sick of the work, when one morning he awoke to find the wind changed to the west, and laden with dense smoke and the pungent smell of burning wood.

Clearly there was a forest fire, and at no great distance. With a thrill of fright Kenneth thought of the disastrous consequences if it should burn down the bee yard. The fire was far enough away as yet, but it was certainly burning toward him, and the wind seemed to be growing stronger.

He noticed suddenly that the woods were full of moving life. Birds flew silently and swiftly through the smoke overhead, rabbits went past in dozens, avoiding the clearing, and something spectral like that might have been a deer flashed through the thickets. All these animals were flying before the fire, and he took the warning aint. For himself he had no great fear. A forest fire does not usually travel very fast, and he was sure of being able to get over the ten miles to the cleared country.

But the bees! The apiary! It was their whole capital. It had taken years to build it up and it would take years to replace it. And the hives and wax would catch at a spark, and burn like so many candles.

In desperation and despair Kenneth thought of the wintering cellar. If he could get them in, the fire might sweep over the whole clearing without damage. Could he do it? Was there time? It had taken him and his brother two hours to set the bees out that spring, and it would take him, single handed, twice as long. Long before that time the fire would be upon him. But he picked up the nearest hive and ran into the cellar with it, regardless of the flying bees. Then he rushed back for others.

The cellar, or cave, was sunk only a foot or two below the ground level and ran back twenty feet into the hillside. It was braced with flattened timbers within, and entered by a timbered door at the bottom of a little incline. For winter the sandy soil was caved in over this door to a depth of two or three feet, making it weather proof and cold tight.

Kenneth had half a dozen hives stored away in a few minutes. The bees were confused and terrified by the smoke, and they rose in clouds into his face when he lifted them. He had had no time to put on a veil and he was stung pretty freely. But he was hardened to bee stings, and in his excitement he would not have noticed a much worse pain.

One after another he carried the hives in at a run, stacking them up in the cellar. He was afraid to count his progress; he was afraid to look up to see if the fire was burning within sight. He knew that it was growing terribly hot, that the smoke was denser, and that the woods were full of a dull roaring, but he did not know whether this was the fire or the wind, or only the rushing of blood in his ears.

He panted and staggered as he ran to and fro, streaming with perspiration. The rows of hives were melting away. Hardly a score of the white boxes were left. He began to think that he had won the race, and just then a blazing branch dropped at his feet.

Struck with terror, he straightened up and looked round. A furious blast of heat came into his face. The bee yard was a cloud of swirling smoke. Sparks and ashes fell in a continuous rain, and the air was full of blazing branches and shreds of bark that the wind carried overhead, far in advance of the fire.

The paint blistered on the hives, and his skin almost cracked with the heat as he made half a dozen more journeys. He never knew how he got the last dozen hives in, but he found himself suddenly at the door of the cellar, his lungs bursting with smoke, his head on fire—but the bee yard clear.

He dragged out a spade to bank up the doorway, and then he realized that he had ruined his own escape. In that blinding smoke he could never find his way out of the woods.

The only thing left was to share the bees' refuge and get into the cellar himself. He almost closed the door, edged through, and by jabbing into the sandy earth with his spade, he brought it sliding down so that the door was almost sealed. To finish he had to break down the roof at the entrance, and a cart load of earth blocked out the danger.

He was in pitchy darkness and dead silence, and sat down on a bee-hive almost in a state of collapse. The fierce strain was off, and he found that he was utterly exhausted. It was no longer cool in the cellar; it had become hot, smoky and stifling, and he would have given anything for a drink of water. But nothing in the world was less attainable.

In the hot darkness he presently became aware of an enormous dull roaring, like a distant storm. He took it to be the fire outside at first, but soon realized that it was the bees. They were restless and uncomfortable, feeling the lack of air like himself.

As he sat there, he dozed with sheer weariness, in spite of discomforts. He passed a considerable time in this way, two-thirds unconscious, and was aroused sharply by being stung on the leg.

It awakened him fully, and he found that there were bees crawling inside his trousers. There were bees on his arms, too, and under his sleeves and down his neck. He tried to brush them off, and was stung severely in half a dozen places.

During his furious labor he had disregarded stings, but now he preferred to avoid them. He struck a match, and in the brief blaze was appalled to see that of the tiers of white hives nothing was visible. They were black with bees, completely covered with the crawling insects that the heat had caused to leave the combs.

His own clothing was covered with them, too, and they were tangled in his hair, stinging when they found themselves caught; he could not move without receiving a poisoned thrust till the whole surface of his body felt inflamed with venom. He was inured to stings, but not to so many at once, and he found himself growing sick and faint.

He began to wish he had taken his chances in the woods. Fire would be no worse than poison. But now it would be suicidal to leave the cave for several hours, and he tried to nerve himself to endure it.

It seemed an eternity as minute after minute passed. He almost ceased to feel the pain of the new stings, but he felt poisoned and sick to the heart. He had a wild impulse to burst open the door and rush out.

He resisted this suicidal impulse as long as he could, but the impulse grew upon him like a mania. He could think of nothing else. If he remained there he felt sure that he would faint, and if he once fell, he would probably never get up again. He would be stung to death or suffocated.

The touch of the crawling masses nauseated him. It was more than he could bear. In reckless desperation he groped for the spade again, and attacked the earth like a madman, flinging it aside from the doorway. Light came through at last. He dashed at the first opening and squeezed his way out.

To his astonishment a hot, wet air met him. The woods were shrouded thick, but it was not smoke; it was steam. The ashes on the ground were muddy, and he realized that it was raining in torrents.

It rained almost without ceasing for three or four days, and at the end of that time George Munson arrived, expecting to find the apiary and his brother consumed together.

Kenneth went home with him, and was sick for a week. The stings left no permanent effect, but it was months before he could overcome a qualm of horror at the sight of bees.

Carries Her Coffin

Bristol, Tenn., July 22.—The agent at Paw Paw, a little station on the Big Sandy and Cumberland Railroad, in Virginia, confessed that he was startled when an elderly woman, with a sad expression, stepped up to the ticket window and called for a ticket to a little town in Tennessee, and to the demand for a ticket she added: "And please tell me what it will cost me to express my coffin to the same place?"

The woman was Eliza Dodson, who for fifteen years had carried about the country this coffin.

In the days of her youth she loved a young mountaineer in Buchanan County, Va., and he was devoted to her. But this young man had a mountaineer rival. One evening while the young lady was planning her wedding with her fiance under a trysting tree the rival shot the young man from ambush, and he fell, dying in her arms. For many years Miss Dodson brooded over the sad fate of her lover. Finally she had the tree cut down and a coffin made for herself.

"I will be content," said the elderly little woman, "if only when I come to die I am given assurance that my body will be buried in this coffin, for it represents all in this world that is dear to me."

A LUMBERMAN'S OPINION

"I was troubled with palpitation of the heart and sleeplessness," writes Mr. Wm. Pritchard, Lumber Inspector, Lumsden Mills, Ont., "and used Dr. Chase's Nerve Food with very great benefit, as my whole system was strengthened and built up." Dr. Chase's Nerve Food forms new, rich blood and restores the feeble wasted nerve cells.

Yearly Loss

Columbus, Ohio, July 22.—"Approximately $100,000,000 loss is caused to the country yearly by reason of the decrease in the number of native song birds and the increase in the activities of the human, or rather inhuman, tree butcher," said John Davey, tree expert and naturalist, who is making a tour of the United States and Canada in the interest of the Restoration Band of America. "In either case the result is that trees are slowly eliminated from cities, towns and the country.

"I am by profession a tree surgeon," continued Mr. Davey, "but I long for the day when it will be no longer necessary for me to ply my trade. It is a simple thing to make tree surgery unnecessary. If we could get plenty of native song birds no trees would be troubled by insects. In this way danger of decay would be eliminated. And if we could curb the destructive activities of the tree butcher I would be out of work for good.

"The purpose of the Restoration Band of America is to educate children so that they will become versed in the nature, use and culture of trees."

About Aeroplanes

There are three standard types of aeroplanes regularly manufactured in the United States, writes George E. Walsh, in the Independent, and the catalogue prices range from $5,000 to $6,500 each for the ordinary 25-30 horse power fotors. The cost of airships is, then, not much greater than that of an up-to-date automobile of the big touring type, and there is no fear that the initial expense will deter many from flying. There must be a firstclass mechanician who understands the craft and its mechanism clearly, but the wage of such a man is no greater than that of a first-class chauffeur.

The novice wishing to fly has thus all the preliminary equipments at his disposal at a cost within reason, and which he is accustomed to pay for the privilege of owning and operating a big touring car. But with the purchase of an airship and the hiring of an able mechanician, only the preliminaries have been arranged. Any man can learn with a few lessons to operate an automobile, and without any real risk of himself or his machine he can within a week run it easily on the less frequented thoroughfares. In fact, the work is so simple that the manufacturers are willing to teach the prospective owner to operate the car free of all expense.

But navigating the air in an aeroplane is quite a different proposition. The only way to learn to fly is to fly, and you can't fly at a slow speed. For buoyancy the airship must start off and maintain a speed approximately of 20 to 30 miles an hour. To operate one a beginner must therefore undertake at the very start a speed that with an automobile would be criminal for a novice except on aplace where the roads were as wide as the country.

In France a novice can receive instructions in aviation at a cost of $1,000. The Wright brothers have instructed a number in the navigation of their machines at Montgomery, Ala., but their pupils are chiefly men who intend to exhibit at fairs and aviation contests in the Wright crafts. In England Grahame White is about to open a school for instruction, and the cost will average at least a thousand dollars for each apt pupil. Aeroplane schools are now being established in different parts of the United States, and instruction in the art of flying will soon become comparatively easy. The cost, however, will be somewhat prohibitive to all except those with plenty of money.

There is, of course, another side to this question which promises to make these schools of instruction popular even with the price placed so high. The ambitious aviators see a chance to make fame and money. Most of the airship men with a national or international fame can get $1,000 for each exhibition at fairs and aviation meets. In addition to this they can qualify for any of the big prize competitions constantly being arranged in towns and cities. The earnings of a successful flyer, who has no serious mishaps, may thus in the ordinary course of events reach $25,000 a season, and if one of the big prizes is won in addition the rewards may be increased one-half to two-thirds. His airship is thus paid for, and all of his expenses, within a year, and a comfortable sum left over.

Barring breakdowns and accidents of all kinds, the cost of flying is comparatively light. Grahame White, who first made a real effort to figure out the actual cost of flying with his 60 horse power motor, estimated that the approximate cost was about six cents a mile. This was for the petrol and lubricating oil. In Hamilton's flight from Philadelphia to New York, the cost of fuel and lubricating oil for the trip averaged 4 1-2 cents per mile. With the airships of ordinary make not intended to break speed records, the cost of flying would be much cheaper, for the 25 horse power motors consume less fuel and oil in a 40-mile spin. It may be done at a cost of three cents a mile in these smaller machines.

But accidents of a minor nature are almost sure to happen sooner or later and the repairs and cost of upkeep must be figured. Also the cost of depreciation. We have no data on which to base the average life of usefulness of an airship. The changes have been made so rapidly that an airship is apt to be out of date within a year. Some are changed and improved every few months. The lack of absolute standardisation is responsible for this. But that applies more particularly to the racing machines. If one is content to purchase an ordinary aeroplane for pleasure without entering contests and exhibitions, there is no reason why, barring accidents of a serious nature, it should not continue to fly for several years.

But the airship is a far frailer machine than the automobile. It is constructed on the principle of reducing it to a minimum of weight consistent with strength. This process has its disadvantages. It makes the liability to accident very great, and it reduces the durability of the whole structure.

The motor of the airship, for instance, is a wonderful piece of mechanism. It has been whittled down in weight until every surplus pound of metal has been eliminated. The weight of the motor with its magneto nevertheless equals about one-fifth of the whole weight of the machine, and it seems impossible to make it lighter and efficient. And yet the motor's skipping, breakdown or general crankiness causes nine-tenths of all the accidents in the air. Every inventor of airships has worked for years at the motor to perfect it, but it is still an uncertain quantity. Yet it is marvelous, considering the weight and size, what the airship motor will do. Some of them weigh only twice the number of pounds of their rated horse-power and they do efficient work at that. The lightest motor for airships weighs only 22 pounds, but it hardly develops the necessary horsepower to make it of value except in the smallest crafts.

The reliability of the airship motor is not anywhere near that of the powerful motors used in automobiles. An airship motor that can keep going steadily without a skip or accident for two hours is a remarkable machine, and yet in endurance tests an automobile has run 10,000 miles without the engine showing a skip or breakdown of any kind. But then an automobile motor makes 800 revolutions per minute against the airship's 1,200 to 1,400 revolutions, and the latter is mounted on a frail, pliable engine base, while the former is securely anchored to an iron base.

The cost of flying cannot thus be approximated without considering the weakness of the motor as well as the aeroplane itself. A new motor may cost $500 and more, and if it breaks down at a critical moment it may cost the owner his life and the loss of his whole airship. Protection against motor mishaps is a serious question with the aviators. Some experienced flyers can foretell motor troubles in time to make a graceful landing without injury to the machine, but the novice would have to spend a good deal of time in the air before he could handle his machine with such dexterity. One accident may cost thousands of dollars and another may bring a loss of only a few hundreds.

The average life of an airship which meets with no serious accident, should be at least two or three years. There are some airships that have been in use for upwards of four years, and in that time they have made numerous flights without breakdowns. Apparently they are as good to-day as when first launched; but they have had their parts constantly renewed and strengthened, so that in some respects they have been almost entirely rebuilt.

The cost of flying is thus summed up by an expert aviator who has had no serious accidents, but bases his claim upon the average cost of ten successful flyers who have had a good many of the troubles common to the bird man:

Cost of airship, $5,000.

Cost of fuel and oil, five cents per mile.

Cost of upkeep and renewing of parts, $50 for each long trip.

Cost of break-downs and accidents, $100 to $5,000 per year.

A rather expensive sport, if one meets with all the mishaps that hover in the air, but not so costly if one is fortunate enough to escape all except the minor troubles.

There is a constant demand for airships in the United States and Europe and most of the factories have orders a year or two ahead. The production is at the rate of about 500 a year in the United States, and possibly twice that number in Europe.

While the cost of flying has been high in the past, it has paid those who have undertaken it pretty well. Paulhan, who started in as a circus tight-rope walker, has made a comfortable fortune with his airships. Before he took to flying he was working for $15 a week in an airship factory in Paris. He made a local reputation in several flights and then, by beating the record for high flying, his services were immediately in demand at $1,000 a meet. Within two years he had captured in prizes or won by aviation flights $200,000. Bleriot was another fortunate record maker, for which he received nearly $100,000 before he went into manufacturing.

After all, the airship is still in its experimental stage. When flights can be made without the danger of disaster every time a motor refuses to work or a propeller gets stuck or a steering apparatus breaks, the cost of flying will be enormously reduced. The cost to-day comes from mishaps rather than from anything else. Eliminate the hazards of disaster to the machine and flying will be no more expensive as a sport than many others now so popular—automobiling, for instance, or owning your own steam yacht or large motor boat.

DISFIGURED FOR LIFE!

Mothers Should Realize What Neglect of Skin-Troubles May Mean to Children.

A lifetime of disfigurement and suffering often results from the neglect, in infancy or childhood, of minor affections of the skin and scalp. A mother overlooks a little rash or attempts some simple treatment and in a day, perhaps, the little one is covered with severe eczema or a similar distressing eruption. Then the struggle for a cure begins.

A multitude of remedies are tried, doctor after doctor consulted and hospitals visited, but too often the suffering extends, without substantial relief, from days to weeks, weeks to months and months to years. Added to this is the ever-present fear that the itching, burning and disfiguration will become chronic, marring future welfare and making life miserable.

In the prevention of the simple skin troubles from which all this suffering so often arises and in establishing a condition of skin health that makes eruptions impossible, mothers are assured that nothing is purer, sweeter or more effective than Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. And greater still, if possible, is the success of these simple household remedies in the treatment of the severer skin affections themselves. With the first warm bath with Cuticura Soap and gentle application of Cuticura Ointment, the itching and burning of eczema cease, the child falls into a refreshing sleep, the mother rests and for the first time, possibly, in many weeks peace falls on a disturbed household. Frequently a single cake of Cuticura Soap and box of Cuticura Ointment are sufficient.

Positive as is this statement, it is justified by more than thirty years of preeminence in these remedies. To quote but a single instance, Robert Mann, of Procter, Minnesota, says:

"Our boy was born in Toronto on Oct. 18, 1908, and when three months old a slight rash appeared on his cheek. What appeared to be a water blister would form. When it broke, matter would run out, starting new blisters until his entire face, head and shoulders were a mass of scabs and you could not see a particle of clear skin. We tried about every advertised remedy without avail, indeed some of them only added to his suffering and one in particular, the — Remedy, almost put the infant into convulsions. The family doctor prescribed for him and told us to bathe the baby in buttermilk. This did not do any good, so we took him to a hospital. He was treated as an out-patient twice a week and he got worse, if anything. We decided that it could not be cured and must run its course and so we just kept his arms bandaged to his side to prevent his tearing his flesh. We left Toronto and shortly after our arrival in Duluth, the Cuticura Remedies were recommended. We started using them in May, 1909, and soon the cure was complete. You would not think he was the same child for Cuticura made his skin perfectly clear and he is entirely free from the skin disease. There has been no return. We still use only Cuticura Soap for baby's bath."

"God's Own People Live Up Here"

BY HELEN ROSS GARD

It was but a short time before the great northern fire that two courageous young women typists of New York city, to whom faraway fields seemed very green, sought the wilds of the Porcupine mining country. They believed that they had something to sell the camp which was needed so much that it would be rendering it a service to offer the commodity for sale. They established two stenographic offices, one at the north end of Porcupine Lake, the other at the south. Within a week the girls found their brightest hopes realised. The two little offices were busy all day long, indeed no one would have thought that so many people in that compartively isolated country would have had so much need for stenographic work and communication with the big civilised world to the south. And so two hearts beat happily and two faces smiled cheerily no matter how fast the work came in and piled up, for were they not "making good," and proving the feasibility of the scheme which their friends in the States had called adventurous, but hardly practicable. Yes, they were happy and making a comfortable little pile to take back home, providing they should ever want to leave this delightful country. Perhaps it was all too good to be true, for without warning came the awful fire of Tuesday. Sweeping down upon the town of South Porcupine, it destroyed the office there, but the men of the town weren't going to see two such "game" little girls lose their stock in trade, and what did they do but bury the typewriter. It was saved, and found in perfectly good condition after the fire had passed over. The other office, being located in Golden City, was safe. But it is to the brave men of the north, they say, that they owe their own lives.

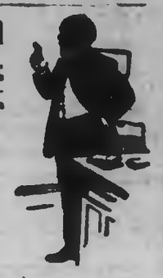
Writing to friends in this city, they have described with graphic pens the frightful experience through which they passed and the scenes attendant on the fire, and they cannot find words adequate to express their appreciation of the wonderful kindness of the citizens up there. "God's own people live up here," wrote one girl. "If the men had been our own brothers they could not have treated us with more considerate kindness," while the other said: "I am glad I came, for it has shown me what real people are, and I feel that life is better worth living in the close proximity to people of this sort, for it has a decidedly uplifting influence over one's life."

"Ministering Angels."

There are two sides to every story. This is the girls' version of the rescue. The story which the men of the town have to relate about the pluck and nerve of those two little Yankee typists is far more thrilling. Colonel Williams, of Kansas City, was at the Murphy House in Golden City on the awful night which followed that day of horror. This hotel, being one of the few left standing, was filled with burned and suffering men from the country around. There were men there whose eyes had been nearly burned out by fire, and others whose sight had been temporarily destroyed by the thick clouds of smoke in which they had worked all day. What did these girls, who had lived always protected from danger and the sight or human suffering, do in this, the supreme crisis of their lives? Listen to what Col. Williams says of their heroism. "All through that ghastly night two ministering angels crept softly from room to room, removing the blood-heated bandages from our eyes and replacing them with fresh, cooling ones. And there were suffering men who, as they lay conscious through the long hours, thanked God for the tenderness of these two girls, whose very physical presence and gentle care brought to them a thought of their own wives, sisters or daughters safe in the south. They did not spare themselves, but moved quietly from sufferer to sufferer, their own dominant thought being to make less poignant everyone's pain."

When the Colonel saw the sentence taken from the two letters referred to above, he continued: "Yes, God's own people live up there, and they are not all men, either."

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription



It is the best of all medicines for the cure of diseases, disorders and weaknesses peculiar to women. It is the only preparation of its kind devised by a regularly graduated physician—an experienced and skilled specialist in the diseases of women.

It is a safe medicine in any condition of the system.

THE ONE REMEDY which contains no alcohol and no injurious habit-forming drugs and which creates no craving for such stimulants.

It is sold by medicine dealers everywhere, and any dealer who hasn't it can get it. Don't take a substitute of unknown composition for this medicine of KNOWN COMPOSITION. No counterfeit is as good as the genuine and the druggist who says something else is "just as good as Dr. Pierce's" is either mistaken or is trying to deceive you for his own selfish benefit. Two Tons in the bin and the winter over

OWNERS of Sunshine furnaces often make this mistake for the first winter. They order the same winter's coal supply as when using their old furnaces. When spring arrives they have about two tons in their bins. Of course, they are delighted. Wouldn't you like to own a furnace that burns less than expected?

Go to our agent in your locality and let him explain why the Sunshine furnace is such a "Famous" fuel-economist.

Let him tell you why the Nickelled steel dome and radiator is a better conductor of heat than plain steel — why the straight semi-steel fire-pot radiates more heat than the common slanting gray iron fire-pot.

Let him show you how the four triangular grate bars release ashes without wasting fuel — how the automatic gas damper makes the Sunshine burn valuable gas fumes that escape up the chimney of ordinary furnaces.

Let him install a Sunshine furnace with a guarantee to heat your house to your entire satisfaction. 50

GALE PASSING OVER.

Ontario Points Receiving Tail End of Storm.

Toronto, July 26.—We have been very fortunate here in Ontario in just escaping a severe gale, t observatory officials state. Yesterday's storms were nothing more than the tail end of the wind storm that was passing through Ontario. On the south side of the lake the gale was felt in its real strength — the wind whistling through the trees at 50 miles per hour in many places not far from Buffalo and Rochester.

"The disturbance is passing in a northeasterly direction across Ontario and Quebec," said the weatherman last night. "It wasn't at all severe in this part of the province, and it's all over anyhow."

The officials state that many people are still enquiring about what is regarded as abnormally low temperature at the present time.

"The temperature is not exceptionally low," said the weatherman, "but in reality it is a point or two ahead of the average, as far as minimum temperatures are concerned anyhow. In thirteen different years the minimum temperature for the month of July has been 50 degrees, and during the present month it is 52 degrees. In one instance the minimum temperature for July registered at the local observatory was 39 degrees. It's just a contrast with the previous siege of hot weather we have been having. That's all."

Storm Hurts Apples.

Woodstock, July 26.—What promised to be a good crop of apples in Oxford County was sadly depleted by a severe wind storm which visited this district on Monday night. Although there are few reports of trees being blown down, from all districts come stories of the apples themselves being shaken off in great quantities. Pear, plum and other fruit trees also suffered, but these are scarce in comparison with apples, so the loss is not so serious. It is too soon to make an estimate of the value of the apples lost, but it will be heavy.

River Traffic Stopped.

Brockville, July 26.—At noon yesterday there subsided a terrific gale, which had prevailed for 24 hours, tieing up traffic on this section of the River St. Lawrence. Only boats of large dimensions ventured out, and these navigated under difficulties.

From the rural district come reports of widespread damage to trees and fences. Orchards and small fruit suffered to the extent of several thousands of dollars throughout this district. Grain also was leveled in all directions.

Typhoon In Japan.

Tokio, July 26.—A typhoon centering over Tokio and Yokhoama reached its height at 3 o'clock this morning. Widespread damage has been done in the lower districts of the city, which are flooded, and from fifty to a hundred persons are missing. It is feared that a great number of fishing and other vessels have been lost.

CLIFFORD IS BETTER.

Passing Indisposition Was Not Appendicitis After All.

Toronto, July 26.—A cablegram received yesterday afternoon by the wife of King's Prize at Bisley, shows that King's Prize at Bisley, shows that he has recovered from his indisposition, which was thought to have been appendicitis.

The probable time of the arrival of Private Clifford in Toronto is Saturday, August 12. He is coming on the Allan liner Victoria, which leaves Liverpool on August 4 and is due to arrive in Montreal on August 11.

The time of his arrival may, however, be delayed by receptions in Quebec and Montreal. So far, no word of any preparations to receive him in these cities has been received, but it is altogether likely that they will entertain him in each place for a while. It may be that his arrival here will be delayed until Monday, August 14.

Arrangements for his reception in Toronto have not yet been completed. He is not coming with the rest of the Canadian Bisley team, for they sail on Aug. 3. Then there is little possibility of their being held up by welcomes en route.

Only Enough For One.

Sheridan was once staying at the house of an elderly maiden lady in the country, who wanted more of his company than he was willing to give. Proposing one day to take a stroll with him, he excused himself on account of the badness of the weather. Shortly afterward she met him sneaking out alone.

"So, Mr. Sheridan," said she, "it has cleared up."

"Just a little, madam—enough for one, but not enough for two."

The Oldest Member.

In a short while Mr. Samuel Young, British M.P., will enter on his ninetieth year. He is the oldest man in the House of Commons, though it is hard to believe it, for he is wonderfully active. Mr. Young was hailed the other day by an old friend, who congratulated him on looking so well "for a man who must be at least 75." With a twinkle in his eye the aged M.P. replied: "Yes, I am at least 75, for in a short time I celebrate my 80th birthday." He has sat in Parliament since 1892.—Westminster Gazette.

"My new spring gown received a very sincere compliment the other day."

"As to how?"

"The proprietor of a restaurant I went into asked me to sit near the window. Said it would lend taste to his place."—Washington Herald.

"They say that time alone will tell!"
Exclaimed the maiden when
He finally left, and then she turned
The clock hands back to ten.
—Philadelphia Ledger.

Sincere, but Ill Chosen.

At a recent dinner in Washington given by a Democratic senator Speaker Champ Clark said of an opponent's speech delivered that day:

"It was rather barefaced. It made me think of the Bowling Green widower who put on his wife's tomb: 'My wife lies here. All my tears cannot bring her back; therefore I weep.'"—Washington Post.

Missing.

We often read sonnets in praise of the grape
And odes to the ripening corn,
And grandma's farm cookery does not escape,
But when will the poet be born
Who, boldly deserting fruits, pancakes and pies,
Will be so exceedingly rash
As to write us a sonnet or ode that applies
To common bread pudding and hash?
—Judge.

A Matter of Training.

She walked with such a wond'rous grace
It pleased my artist eye,
She did not hobble round the place
On heels three inches high.

She was not laced nor braced nor stayed,
Her hair no puffs o'er knew,
But all the charms that she displayed
From nature's store she drew.

What's that? Where did I meet with her?
In what place is she prized?
She was a south sea islander
Who wasn't "civilized."
—Puck.

GALE PASSING OVER.

Ontario Points Receiving Tail End of Storm.

Toronto, July 26.—We have been very fortunate here in Ontario in just escaping a severe gale, the observatory officials state. Yesterday's storms were nothing more than the tail end of the wind storm that was passing through Ontario. On the south side of the lake the gale was felt in its real strength — the wind whistling through the trees at 50 miles per hour in many places not far from Buffalo and Rochester.

"The disturbance is passing in a northeasterly direction across Ontario and Quebec," said the weatherman last night. "It wasn't at all severe in this part of the province, and it's all over anyhow."

The officials state that many people are still enquiring about what is regarded as abnormally low temperature at the present time.

"The temperature is not exceptionally low," said the weatherman, "but in reality it is a point or two ahead of the average, as far as minimum temperatures are concerned anyhow. In thirteen different years the minimum temperature for the month of July has been 50 degrees, and during the present month it is 52 degrees. In one instance the minimum temperature for July registered at the local observatory was 39 degrees. It's just a contrast with the previous siege of hot weather we have been having. That's all."

Storm Hurts Apples.

Woodstock, July 26.—What promised to be a good crop of apples in Oxford County was sadly depleted by a severe wind storm which visited this district on Monday night. Although there are few reports of trees being blown down, from all districts come stories of the apples themselves being shaken off in great quantities. Pear, plum and other fruit trees also suffered, but these are scarce in comparison with apples, so the loss is not so serious. It is too soon to make an estimate of the value of the apples lost, but it will be heavy.

River Traffic Stopped.

Brockville, July 26.—At noon yesterday there subsided a terrific gale, which had prevailed for 24 hours, tieing up traffic on this section of the River St. Lawrence. Only boats of large dimensions ventured out, and these navigated under difficulties.

From the rural district come reports of widespread damage to trees and fences. Orchards and small fruit suffered to the extent of several thousands of dollars throughout this district. Grain also was leveled in all directions.

Typhoon In Japan.

Tokio, July 26.—A typhoon centering over Tokio and Yokhoama reached its height at 8 o'clock this morning. Widespread damage has been done in the lower districts of the city, which are flooded, and from fifty to a hundred persons are missing. It is feared that a great number of fishing and other vessels have been lost.

CLIFFORD IS BETTER.

Passing Indisposition Was Not Appendicitis After All.

Toronto, July 26.—A cablegram received yesterday afternoon by the wife King's Prize at Bisley, shows that King's Prize at Bisley, shows that he has recovered from his indisposition, which was thought to have been appendicitis.

The probable time of the arrival of Private Clifford in Toronto is Saturday, August 12. He is coming on the Allan liner Victoria, which leaves Liverpool on August 4 and is due to arrive in Montreal on August 11.

The time of his arrival may, however, be delayed by receptions in Quebec and Montreal. So far, no word of any preparations to receive him in these cities has been received, but it is altogether likely that they will entertain him in each place for a while. It may be that his arrival here will be delayed until Monday, August 14.

Arrangements for his reception in Toronto have not yet been completed. He is not coming with the rest of the Canadian Bisley team, for they sail on Aug. 3. Then there is little possibility of their being held up by welcomes en route.

Only Enough For One.

Sheridan was once staying at the house of an elderly maiden lady in the country, who wanted more of his company than he was willing to give. Proposing one day to take a stroll with him, he excused himself on account of the badness of the weather. Shortly afterward she met him speaking out alone.

"So, Mr. Sheridan," said she, "it has cleared up."

"Just a little, madam—enough for one, but not enough for two."

The Oldest Member.

In a short while Mr. Samuel Young, British M.P., will enter on his ninetieth year. He is the oldest man in the House of Commons, though it is hard to believe it, for he is wonderfully active. Mr. Young was hailed the other day by an old friend, who congratulated him on looking so well "for a man who must be at least 75." With a twinkle in his eye the aged M.P. replied: "Yes, I am at least 75, for in a short time I celebrate my 89th birthday." He has sat in Parliament since 1892.—Westminster Gazette.

"My new spring gown received a very sincere compliment the other day."

"As to how?"

"The proprietor of a restaurant I went into asked me to sit near the window. Said it would lend taste to his place."—Washington Herald.

"They say that time alone will tell!"
Exclaimed the maiden when
He finally left, and then she turned
The clock hands back to ten.
—Philadelphia Ledger.

Sincere, but Ill Chosen.

At a recent dinner in Washington given by a Democratic senator Speaker Champ Clark said of an opponent's speech delivered that day:

"It was rather barefaced. It made me think of the Bowling Green widower who put on his wife's tomb: 'My wife lies here. All my tears cannot bring her back; therefore I weep.'"—Washington Post.

Missing.

We often read sonnets in praise of the grape
And odes to the ripening corn,
And grandma's farm cookery does not escape,
But when will the poet be born
Who, boldly deserting fruits, pancakes and pies,
Will be so exceedingly rash
As to write us a sonnet or ode that applies
To common bread pudding and hash?
—Judge.

A Matter of Training.

She walked with such a woodfreus grace
It pleased my artist eye.
She did not hobble round the place
On heels three inches high.

She was not laced nor traced nor stayed,
Her hair no puffs o'er knew,
But all the charms that she displayed
From nature's store she drew.

What's that? Where did I meet with her?
In what place is she prized?
She was a south sea islander
Who wasn't "civilized."
—Puck.

HE WINS $50,000

French Lieutenant Captures the Circuit of Britain Navigation Contest, a Distance of Over 1,000 Miles

A RECORD FLIGHT

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, JULY 26.—A Beaumont, whose real name is Lieutenant Deconneau, of the French Army, finished at 2 o'clock this afternoon the circuit of Britain's aviation race of 2,010 miles, winning the Daily Mail prize of $50,000.00.

"KNOCKOUT" BROWN HAD EASY WIN IN TORONTO

TORONTO, JULY 26.—Nearly 1,200 members of the Olympic Boxing Club attended the bouts last night at the Island Stadium, and incidentally had their first glimpse of Knockout Brown, of New York, of which so much has been circulated recently. Brown met Fighting Jack Kelly, of Baltimore, in what was the feature exhibition, but, as usual, the one with the reputation won. Brown knocking out Kelly in the fourth round. Brown, who is a regular wildcat at the fighting game, was head and shoulders over his opponent in every angle of the fighting game.

What claim Kelly ever had of meeting a man of Brown's calibre does not come from what he showed last night. He lacked everything a good fighter has, and, in fact, did not even know how to cover up before the vicious onslaught of Brown, who floored him to the mat in every one of the first three rounds for a count of eight before he put him away in the fourth. Brown literally made a chopping block out of his opponent with his choppy punches around the head and ears, while his body punches had Kelly groggy at the finish of every round. An amusing incident happened in the third round, with a minute to go, when both fighters went to the ropes and descended to the ground when the posts gave way.

Brown is a sturdy built boy, and well put together, and looks as if he could stand a lot of punishment in a rough battle. He has a wicked left that goes straight at the body like a rocket, while his right is just about as good. Before the mill the two fighters were taken by flashlight.

Jack McCracken of Toronto had all the best of the first preliminary against Kid Supples of Buffalo, at 118 pounds. McCracken had Supples all but away in the fifth and sixth rounds. Supples is a tall, rangy fellow, without an ounce of flesh on him. All Supples had, however, was a pose.

Trayling and Scotty McEwen furnished the best bout of the night in the second preliminary at 122 pounds Both boys mixed it up in good style but Trayling was the stronger and scored a knockout in the third on a stiff right to the stomach.

Frankie Fleming of Montreal, put away Fred Lansdowne in the third round of a scheduled six-round bout at 122 pounds. Fleming had everything required to beat his weaker opponent, being more aggressive and backed up by a good hard punch in both hands. Fleming is a Toronto boy, and a graduate of the Maitlands. He has been fighting with success around Baltimore.

The referee was Lou Marsh.

Revolver Went Off And Contents Lodged In Hand

The Lindsay Post says:

Last evening Constable Short was the victim of a severe accident at the police station. He had just finished cleaning his 38 calibre revolver and was about ot attend to Chief Chilton's gun when a chamber was discharged. The contents lodged in his right hand, inflicting a painful wound which bled profusely. It was fortunate indeed that the revolver contained blank cartridges

Splendid Roads In This City

City Solicitor Hall, at the meeting of the Board of Works last night, stated that on his tour up west, he had not seen in many of the towns or cities, any roads as well kept as Peterborough's, except where the streets were paved. He had visited all the towns, such as Guelph, Oshawa, Bowmanville and Whitby, but in none of these places were the roads as well kept as in this city. In view of recent complaints made about the streets, he had taken special notice of the streets in these towns, with the result stated.

TROUBLE OVER SEWER IN SOUTH END OF THE CITY MR. BOGUE GIVES IT UP

Matter Was Considered at a Special Meeting of the Board of Works Last Night---City Will Hold Mr. Conroy, the Original Contractor Responsible if the Work is Not Completed.

A special meeting of the Board of Works was called last night to deal with the water works problem.

Mr. Bogue, who took over the contract of putting in the water works plant, and constructing the sewer at the South end of the city some time ago, quit his job, and the Board met to take necessary steps in the matter. They finally decided to give Mr Bogue six days' time in which to proceed with the work, at the end of which, if he has not proceeded the city will take the matter up, and will do the work itself, holding Mr. Conroy, the man with whom the contract was made in the first place, liable for the extra expense, if any.

There were present at the meeting Ald. Metheral, chairman; Alderman Graham, Brown, Buller, Anderson. Duncan, also City Engineer Hay, Mr. Pardoe, engineer from Toronto; City Solicitor Hall, Mr. W. Chitman and Mr. Conroy.

Mr. Chitman was first consulted in the matter, and stated that he knew nothing of the facts of the case whatever. The City Engineer had merely informed him that Mr. Bogue had quit work but he was not aware of the reason.

It was then explained that Mr. Bogue gave up the job as being impossible to be done on account of the quicksand in that part of the city. Mr. Chitman did not think that the job was at all a physical impossibility, and then Mr. Hall stated that Mr. Conroy was the contractor with the city, and he would be held responsible for the work being completed. And then the following conversation took place.

Mr. Hall: "It serves you right. you should not have given that man the contract."

Mr. Conroy then entered, and was informed that he was going to be held responsible.

Mr. Conroy: "I have nothing to do in the matter. The contract was turned over to Mr. Bogue. I did not know he had quit, but I suppose if he does not complete the contract, I am liable. But Mr. Bogue took the contract and I am out of it."

Mr. Hall: "Not with the city. You have your contract with the city, and with Mr. Bogue also. The city has no contract with Bogue. You must arrange with Mr. Bogue to finish the work."

"I thought I was through arranging, when I turned over the contract. I don't like to have any trouble about contracts and I never have had any," said Mr. Conroy.

Ald. Graham then made a motion to the effect that the city give Contractors Bogue and Conroy six days in which to proceed with the work, and if the work was not proceeded with in the six days, the city proceed with it, and charge the extra expense, if any, to Conroy. This was seconded and carried.

Mr. Conroy then stated that he would see Bogue immediately, and see what the matter was. He said that he had Mr. Bogue's surety, just the same as the city had his.

Communications.

The communications were then dealt with as follows:

Re lighting of the lift-lock. The Peterborough Light and Power Co. asked permission to erect eleven poles on Hunter street, from the corner of Concession street, to the Lift-Lock. This was granted.

Re application of Bell Telephone Co., to lay conduits on several streets They promised to put the streets in as good shape as they had previously been. Permission was granted.

The matter of the bad condition in which the surface of the Smith street bridge is in, was brought up, and arrangements were made to have it repaired soon.

A number of the citizens at the south end of the city on Aylmer St., want the sidewalk put on the outside of the tree line, instead of the inside as arranged for by the City Engineer. The Aldermen thought that the question had been up often enough before and it was time it was decided. Ald. Buller was the first to express any definite opinion. He said: "The people on Aylmer street, at the south end, are all friends of mine, but I would not consent to it being put on the outside, at all. If I were speaking in my own interests I would say, put it on the outside. But in the interests of the people and their safety, in general, I would not. Who wants to play 'shinney' on a place like that? One block in, and another block out, and people walking off the end of the blocks at night and getting hurt, and then bringing in a lawsuit on the city for damages. Anyhow, the C. P. R. crossing is not wide enough now. It matters nothing to me, which side it is on: but in the interests of the people in general, I would have it on the inside."

The matter was again left over for decision, but it is quite probable that the walk will be put on the inside.

BRITAIN AND SPAIN MAY FORM A NEW ALLIANCE

LONDON, JULY 26.—The arrival of King Alfonso and his conference with Sir Edward Grey, was one of the developments in the Moroccan situation this morning. In the meantime there is a good deal of excitement on the stock exchange regarding this matter. The much-talked-of war with Germany may result from this trouble.

REPAIRS ON LINES

The Examiner is informed to-day by Mr. J. H. Munro, of the Peterborough Radial Railway, that the work of extending the company's line south to Byersville cannot possibly be commenced within the next two months.

"There has been a delay in getting the material necessary," Mr. Munro stated, "and although we are urging the manufacturers as much as possible, it will be two months before we can secure the material. Afterwards we will have to proceed with the repairing of our trolley wires and placing them in good condition for the winter months."

The extension to the line is to run from the present terminus at the Canadian General entrance south to Byersville and the Roman Catholic cemetery, a distance of about a mile.

CROSS TIES USED IN CANADA

The Forestry Branch of the Department of the Interior has collected statistics with regard to the cross tie consumption in Canada for 1910.

There were 9,213,962 cross-ties purchased in 1910 by the steam and electric roads of Canada, at a cost of $3,535,228. This is a decrease of 35 per cent. from the number purchased in 1909. The average cost of these ties at this point of purchase was 38 cents per tie. Three kinds of wood—cedar, jack pine and hemlock, furnished 77 per cent. of all the ties purchased. Cedar itself supplied 40 per cent. of the total consumption, and it's use is increasing yearly in proportion to other species. Oak, which makes an expensive tie, costing 74 cents each, was used principally by a United states company, having mileage in Canada. Of the total number of ties purchased, 70 per cent. were hewn ties. The only important species, which has a majority of sawn ties, was oak. Sawn ties cost, on the average, 36 cents per tie, and hewn ties cost 3 cents more. The steam railways used 25 per cent. of all the ties and these ties cost them on the average, 39 cents. The electric railways used 302,540 ties—an increase of 183 per cent. over 1909. They paid for their ties 41 cents each. Although on the average they use smaller ties, this excess of 3 cents in the cost is due not only to the disadvantages incident to contracts for small quantities of materials, but also to the fact that the electric roads are more likely to purchase ties at points where the price includes transportation charges.

"OBSERVER" SAYS WE HAVE ENOUGH PARKS ALREADY

The Proposed By-laws.

Sir,—It is to be regretted that citizens do not feel more responsibility in regard to exercising their franchise at the polls and so taking their part in determining what is best for the city and its inhabitants, including themselves. Let us have a large turnout of voters to-morrow.

As to the questions before us, I am not clear as to the merits of the two factory schemes, except that as a factory town we should treat our facories with reasonable consideration.

But as to the other question, I do beg to express the hope that voters will not rashly endorse this proposed expenditure for new parks. If there is one thing with which we are well supplied in Peterborough, it is parks. This is the comment of every visitor amazed at their extent. Surely it is not to be expected that this luxury needs to be brought to every man's door. As a matter of fact we have two centrally situated and easy means of access to the others from all parts of the city, and these parks are actually being used by the people of the south and east as well as by those of the north and west. We see our tax bills climbing steadily up and feel the difficulty of meeting them. There is bound to be a great deal more difficulty before long if we don't put some check on the lavish expenditure of public funds.

Here is an opportunity for expressing public sentiment on this important point. Are we not in danger of making Peterborough too expensive to live in? This is not a setting of one part of the city against another. The interests of the whole city are concerned.

Yours,
OBSERVER.

Entertainment Is Postponed

On account of the illnes of Mr. Labadie, the entertainment which was to have been given by Mr. Francis Labadie in the Conservatory of Music Hall, under the auspices of the Belmont Club, has necessarily been postponed. However, it is expected that Mr. Labadie and his assistants will be here later in the season to give his famous entertainment.

HORSES MUST BE TIED

The Chief of Police wishes the attention of the public drawn to the fact that there is a by-law prohibiting any person leaving a horse or horses standing on the street without being tied. A number of accidents and runaways have occurred recently, the cause of which can be readily traced to carelessness on the part of drivers. No fatalities have yet occurred, caused by runaways in the city, but some very narrow escapes are recorded, and it must be strictly understood that in future, any person leaving horses untied along the street, are liable to a fine. The attention of the merchants, in particular, is here-by drawn to the fact, that they should give strict instructions to their drivers to tie the horses at all times, and those leaving horses on the street without being securely fastened, will be dealt with in a severe manner.

A Fine Excursion

The excursion under the auspices of Court Stanley No. 7680 A.O.F. yesterday per the steamer 'Stoney Lake' was a great success, in spite of the cold, blustery weather. About 215 people were on board the steamer when she left Wolfe Street Wharf yesterday morning and the unfavourable climatic conditions were forgotten in the enjoyment of the long sail through the beautiful chain of Kawartha Lakes. Tucker's Orchestra of Peterborough accompanied the party and supplied splendid music for dancing their playing being greatly enjoyed by the excursionists. The party returned to Peterborough on the Grand Trunk flyer last night.

SPLENDID OUTING

Messrs. Warne Have Returned From an Enjoyable Trip to England and the Coronation—Saw Coronation Procession

AND NAVAL REVIEW

Messrs. E. V. and W. B. Warne, of Warne Bros. & Co., returned on Monday after a trip to England, France, Belgium and Germany. On the 23rd of May they left New York, on the Lusitania of the Cunard Line, and arrived at Liverpool, where they took train for London. They spent two weeks at the world's metropolis, visiting the most important places of interest, including the Crystal Palace, where they saw the Canadian exhibit. It was the big feature there, representing almost everything that Canada produces The Coronation exhibit at Shepherd's Bush, got up especially for the Coronation, was another noteworthy event. Everything that is produced on every British possession was there, and the natives of the different colonies were there also, looking after the exhibits, which was a novelty in London. The art galleries, and famous British museum and Zoological Gardens, St. Paul's Cathedral and Westminster Abbey were among the places visited. The House of Parliament was sitting at the time and they were unable to visit that place. Of course the big feature was the Coronation procession, which they witnessed, and also the Royal procession on the following day. The city was beautifully and gorgeously illuminated and decorated, and it was impossible to describe the event.

After two weeks in London Messrs. Warne left for Edinburgh, wher they spent some time in sightseeing. They took a trip through the famous Trossachs, and also a boat trip on Loch Katharine and Loch Lomond. They spent a while at Glasgow, and, after the Coronation festivities, went to visit the southern cities in England, Brighton, Hastings, Brampton, and others, and took in the grand Naval Review, off Portsmouth. The illumination of the fleet of war vessels was a magnificent sight and was one of the most spectacular features of their visit. A fleet of warships 21 miles long, all of large size, native and foreign, was stretched out there before millions of spectators, who watched them from the shore, and from sight-seeing boats. Messrs. Warne took a sight-seeing boat, and made a complete circle of the fleet.

France and Germany.

From there Messrs. Warne crossed over to Dieppe, France, and visited Paris. They spent ten days in Paris sight-seeing, and afterwards visited Versailles, the beautiful and historic ancient city, where stands the old King's palace, and also Fontaine Bleau, a wood covering 5,000 acres, in the middle of which was the ancient palace. The wood has since been destroyed by fire, but the palace was saved. Paris, and Brussels, in Belgium, was included in their itinerary. The principal sight there was the Palace of Justice, where all the courts of law were established, and the public offices of the city. It was the largest building of its kind on the continent. From there they went to Cologne, Germany, where they spent a few days on the Rhine.

They then returned to Paris again, and took in the grand military tournament, witnessing the French military bodies in action, from the highly and perfectly-drilled soldiers, to the Boy Scouts. Here they had war balloons ascending and manoeuvring in the different active service drills, aeroplanes and air craft of different varieties.

They returned to London, where they spent some time visiting other places of interest that they had not seen on their previous visit, and left for home on the Empress of Ireland on the 14th of July. Upon their arrival they spent several days at the ancient City of Quebec, visiting the old forts and other historic places, and arrived in Peterborough on the 24th.

The weather was delightfully cool every place they were and the whole trip was one of the most pleasant.

WARNS EARL HALSBURY

LONDON, JULY 26.—The Times, this morning, takes particular pains to warn Earl Halsbury and other Unionist insurgents, that nothing can be gained by breaking the unity of party at this juncture. There is evidently a strong probability of the great bulk of the Unionists giving way to Asquith's veto bill to prevent the creation of peers to swamp the Opposition.

"KNOCKOUT" BROWN HAD EASY WIN IN TORONTO

TORONTO, JULY 26.—Nearly 1,200 members of the Olympic Boxing Club attended the bouts last night at the Island Stadium, and incidentally had their first glimpse of Knockout Brown, of New York, of which so much has been circulated recently. Brown met Fighting Jack Kelly, of Baltimore, in what was the feature exhibition, but, as usual, the one with the reputation won. Brown knocking out Kelly in the fourth round. Brown, who is a regular wildcat at the fighting game, was head and shoulders over his opponent in every angle of the fighting game.

What claim Kelly ever had of meeting a man of Brown's calibre does not come from what he showed last night. He lacked everything a good fighter has, and, in fact, did not even know how to cover up before the vicious onslaught of Brown, who floored him to the mat in every one of the first three rounds for a count of eight before he put him away in the fourth. Brown literally made a chopping block out of his opponent with his choppy punches around the head and ears, while his body punches had Kelly groggy at the finish of every round. An amusing incident happened in the third round, with a minute to go, when both fighters went to the ropes and descended to the ground when the posts gave way.

Brown is a sturdy built boy, and well put together, and looks as if he could stand a lot of punishment in a rough battle. He has a wicked left that goes straight at the body like a rocket, while his right is just about as good. Before the mill the two fighters were taken by flashlight.

Jack McCracken of Toronto had all the best of the first preliminary against Kid Supples of Buffalo, at 118 pounds. McCracken had Supples all but away in the fifth and sixth rounds. Supples is a tall, rangy fellow, without an ounce of flesh on him. All Supples had, however, was a pose.

Trayling and Scotty McEwen furnished the best bout of the night in the second preliminary at 122 pounds. Both boys mixed it up in good style but Trayling was the stronger and scored a knockout in the third on a stiff right to the stomach.

Frankie Fleming of Montreal, put away Fred Lansdowne in the third round of a scheduled six-round bout at 122 pounds. Fleming had everything required to beat his weaker opponent, being more aggressive and backed up by a good hard punch in both hands. Fleming is a Toronto boy, and a graduate of the Maitlands. He has been fighting with success around Baltimore.

The referee was Lou Marsh.

Revolver Went Off And Contents Lodged In Hand

The Lindsay Post says:

Last evening Constable Short was the victim of a severe accident at the police station. He had just finished cleaning his 38 calibre revolver and was about to attend to Chief Chilton's gun when a chamber was discharged. The contents lodged in his right hand, inflicting a painful wound which bled profusely. It was fortunate indeed that the revolver contained blank cartridges.

Splendid Roads In This City

City Solicitor Hall, at the meeting of the Board of Works last night, stated that on his tour up west, he had not seen in many of the towns or cities, any roads as well kept as Peterborough's, except where the streets were paved. He had visited all the towns, such as Guelph, Oshawa, Bowmanville and Whitby, but in none of these places were the roads as well kept as in this city. In view of recent complaints made about the streets, he had taken special notice of the streets in these towns, with the result stated.

TROUBLE OVER SEWER IN SOUTH END OF THE CITY MR. BOGUE GIVES IT UP

Matter Was Considered at a Special Meeting of the Board of Works Last Night---City Will Hold Mr. Conroy, the Original Contractor Responsible if the Work is Not Completed.

A special meeting of the Board of Works was called last night to deal with the water works problem.

Mr. Bogue, who took over the contract of putting in the water works plant, and constructing the sewer at the South end of the city some time ago, quit his job, and the Board met to take necessary steps in the matter. They finally decided to give Mr. Bogue six days' time in which to proceed with the work, at the end of which, if he has not proceeded the city will take the matter up, and will do the work itself, holding Mr. Conroy, the man with whom the contract was made in the first place, liable for the extra expense, if any.

There were present at the meeting Ald. Metheral, chairman; Alderman Graham, Brown, Buller, Anderson. Duncan, also City Engineer Huy, Mr. Parlee, engineer from Toronto; City Solicitor Hall, Mr. W. Chitman and Mr. Conroy.

Mr. Chitman was first consulted in the matter, and stated that he knew nothing of the facts of the case whatever. The City Engineer had merely informed him that Mr. Bogue had quit work but he was not aware of the reason.

It was then explained that Mr. Bogue gave up the job as being impossible to be done on account of the quicksand in that part of the city. Mr. Chitman did not think that the job was at all a physical impossibility, and then Mr. Hall stated that Mr. Conroy was the contractor with the city, and he would be held responsible for the work being completed. And then the following conversation took place.

Mr. Hall: "It serves you right: you should not have given that man the contract."

Mr. Conroy then entered, and was informed that he was going to be held responsible.

Mr. Conroy: "I have nothing to do in the matter. The contract was turned over to Mr. Bogue. I did not know he had quit, but I suppose if he does not complete the contract, I am liable. But Mr. Bogue took the contract and I am out of it."

Mr. Hall: "Not with the city. You have your contract with the city, and with Mr. Bogue also. The city has no contract with Bogue. You must arrange with Mr. Bogue to finish the work."

"I thought I was through arranging, when I turned over the contract. I don't like to have any trouble about contracts and I never have had any," said Mr. Conroy.

Ald. Graham then made a motion to the effect that the city give Contractors Bogue and Conroy six days in which to proceed with the work, and if the work was not proceeded with in the six days, the city proceed with it, and charge the extra expense, if any, to Conroy. This was seconded and carried.

Mr. Conroy then stated that he would see Bogue immediately, and see what the matter was. He said that he had Mr. Bogue's surety, just the same as the city had his.

Communications.

The communications were then dealt with as follows:

Re lighting of the lift-lock. The Peterborough Light and Power Co. asked permission to erect eleven poles on Hunter street, from the corner of Concession street, to the Lift-Lock. This was granted.

Re application of Bell Telephone Co., to lay conduits on several streets They promised to put the streets in as good shape as they had previously been. Permission was granted.

The matter of the bad condition in which the surface of the Smith street bridge is in, was brought up, and arrangements were made to have it repaired soon.

A number of the citizens at the south end of the city on Aylmer St., want the sidewalk put on the outside of the tree line, instead of the inside as arranged for by the City Engineer. The Aldermen thought that the question had been up often enough before and it was time it was decided. Ald. Buller was the first to express any definite opinion. He said: "The people on Aylmer street, at the south end, are all friends of mine, but I would not consent to it being put on the outside, at all. If I were speaking in my own interests I would say, put it on the outside. But in the interests of the people and their safety, in general, I would not. Who wants to play 'shinney' on a place like that? One block in, and another block out, and people walking off the end of the blocks at night and getting hurt, and then bringing in a lawsuit on the city for damages. Anyhow, the C. P. R. crossing is not wide enough now. It matters nothing to me, which side it is on: but in the interests of the people in general, I would have it on the inside."

The matter was again left over for decision, but it is quite probable that the walk will be put on the inside.

The party returned to Peterborough on the Grand Trunk fiver last night.

SIX MONTHS IN CENTRAL

A man named George Ellsworth was given six months in the Central Prison by the magistrate at Lindsay last night for being a vagrant. And it is understood that the authorities in Lindsay intend getting after the vagrants and freeing the town of these low characters. The local police authorities have succeeded in getting rid of the natives here, and a vagrant has not flared to show himself in the police court for quite a while, only once when a lone straggler from an outside point came.

SPLENDID OUTING

Messrs. Warne Have Returned From an Enjoyable Trip to England and the Coronation—Saw Coronation Procession

AND NAVAL REVIEW

Messrs. E. V. and W. B. Warne, of Warne Bros. & Co., returned on Monday after a trip to England, France, Belgium and Germany. On the 23rd of May they left New York, on the Lusitania of the Cunard Line, and arrived at Liverpool, where they took train for London. They spent two weeks at the world's metropolis, visiting the most important places of interest, including the Crystal Palace, where they saw the Canadian exhibit. It was the big feature there, representing almost everything that Canada produces. The Coronation exhibit at Shepherd's Bush, got up especially for the Coronation, was another noteworthy event. Everything that is produced on every British possession was there, and the natives of the different colonies were there also, looking after the exhibits, which was a novelty in London. The art galleries, and famous British museum and Zoological Gardens, St. Paul's Cathedral and Westminster Abbey were among the places visited. The House of Parliament was sitting at the time and they were unable to visit that place. Of course the big feature was the Coronation procession, which they witnessed, and also the Royal procession on the following day. The city was beautifully and gorgeously illuminated and decorated, and it was impossible to describe the event.

After two weeks in London Messrs. Warne left for Edinburgh, wher they spent some time in sightseeing. They took a trip through the famous Trossachs, and also a boat trip on Loch Katharine and Loch Lomond. They spent a while at Glasgow, and, after the Coronation festivities, went to visit the southern cities in England, Brighton, Hastings, Brampton, and others, and took in the grand Naval Review, off Portsmouth. The illumination of the fleet of war vessels was a magnificent sight and was one of the most spectacular features of their visit. A fleet of war ships 21 miles long, all of large size, native and foreign, was stretched out there before millions of spectators, who watched them from the shore, and from sight-seeing boats. Messrs. Warne took a sight-seeing boat, and made a complete circle of the fleet.

France and Germany.

From there Messrs. Warne crossed over to Dieppe, France, and visited Paris. They spent ten days in Paris sight-seeing, and afterwards visited Versailles, the beautiful and historic ancient city, where stands the old King's palace, and also Fontaine Bleau, a wood covering 5,000 acres, in the middle of which was the ancient palace. The wood has since been destroyed by fire, but the palace was saved. Paris, and Brussels, in Belgium, was included in their itinerary. The principal sight there was the Palace of Justice, where all the courts of law were established, and the public offices of the city. It was the largest building of its kind on the continent. From there they went to Cologne, Germany, where they spent a few days on the Rhine.

They then returned to Paris again, and took in the grand military tournament, witnessing the French military bodies in action, from the highly and perfectly-drilled soldiers, to the Boy Scouts. Here they had war balloons ascending and manoeuvring in the different active service drills, aeroplanes and air craft of different varieties.

They returned to London, where they spent some time visiting other places of interest that they had not seen on their previous visit, and left for home on the Empress of Ireland on the 14th of July. Upon their arrival they spent several days at the ancient City of Quebec, visiting the old forts and other historic places, and arrived in Peterborough on the 24th.

The weather was delightfully cool every place they were and the whole trip was one of the most pleasant.

WARNS EARL HALSBURY

LONDON, JULY 26.—The Times, this morning, takes particular pains to warn Earl Halsbury and other Unionist insurgents, that nothing can be gained by breaking the unity of party at this juncture. There is evidently a strong probability of the great bulk of the Unionists giving way to Asquith's veto bill to prevent the creation of peers to swamp the Opposition.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 26, 1911

A WISE WARNING.

Mr. Fielding has nothing to apologise for in the remarks he made about the influence of Canadian manufacturers on the reciprocity issue, says the Montreal Herald. Every Canadian manufacturer knows, from fifteen years of salutary experience, that there is none of the running amuck habit about Mr. Fielding. He has given them good measure, heaped up and running over, even when carrying the fiscal system of the country closer to the revenue tariff basis. He has favoured them most as against their most immediately dangerous competitors. He brought in the anti-dumping law to still further ensure stability. He has played no favourites, but has done his level best to give every interest its chance. The manufacturers know it, and amongst themselves admit it.

More, they know perfectly well that he is far from exaggerating when he describes the rising anger of the West, or when he foretells to what height that anger would rise if, at the behest of the manufacturing interest, the American offer of reciprocity were to be rejected. The question the wideawake manufacturers are asking themselves and everybody knows it, is not "Shall we let the West have reciprocity?" but rather "Will the West be satisfied if it gets reciprocity?" People who are asking themselves that question have no just grievance against Mr. Fielding for his plain speaking. And if there are any so blind as not to see the moral effect that has been produced by the recent activity in mergers, their leading ought not lightly to be accepted by sober-minded persons.

THE LORDS DIE HARD.

The conduct of the minority of the House of Lords in trying to thwart the efforts of Lord Lansdowne and Mr. Balfour to maintain the dignity of that chamber under very trying circumstances, has for some days been foolish enough, but it was very much outdone by the display of rowdyism made on Monday morning by the Conservative members of the House of Commons. It was absolutely necessary at the present stage of the conflict between the two houses for the Prime Minister to inform the House what course the government intended to take. When Mr. Asquith rose to make his statement, he was incessantly interrupted to such an extent that he was unable to let the public know in this way what the course of events would be for the next few days, and the speaker was at last constrained to adjourn the House till the next day.

There can be no two opinions as to the objectionableness of such conduct on the part of members of a great deliberative assembly. Such an outburst is not deliberation; it is simply rowdyism of the most inexcusable sort. It would have been bad enough at an ordinary election meeting; in the House of Commons, the greatest legislative chamber in the world, it was absolutely beyond endurance. The effect on public opinion cannot fail to be injurious to the cause these men were seeking to aid; that of the independence of the House of Lords, and the sooner such strategy is utterly and forever abandoned, the better for the assailed chamber itself. The House of Commons cannot afford to make itself ridiculous. British popular opinion is too alert for that.

There is one aspect of the pending situation that has a general interest for the whole empire, the necessity for a second chamber and for imposing some kind of limit on its powers. This is an age of democracy, and the masses of the British people will not stand thwarting too long, or about matters they have greatly set their hearts on. The second house should be in the interests of good legislation, made up of men of legislative experience, who can calmly review the work often hasty and impulsive, of the popular chamber.

There are so many eminent jurists in the House of Lords, and so many merchants, financiers, returned governors, and diplomats, that but for the peers who never take part in its proceedings at all, it would be an excellent legislative body. In view of this fact it would be better to retain the hereditary right of a peer to sit in the House of Lords, and trust to the so-called "back woodsmen" to absent themselves and let the law lords and the lay lords who know their own minds on the subjects before the House, perform their part as critics.

At present it would make sad havoc of the case for the House of Lords if the Unionists were to continue their misbehaviour in the House of Commons. That would be to play greatly into the hands of the real enemies of the Peerage, for to add three or four hundred new Peers to the present membership would be to strike a blow at the Peerage as a social institution. Of course, all these new Peers would be only Peers for life.

CANADA AND RECIPROCITY.

The Toronto News contends that the adoption of reciprocity by Congress affords another reason why Canada should not adopt the agreement, and the Mail and Empire takes a similar position, says the Toronto Star. The acceptance of the doctrine expounded by these journals would make all international agreements impossible; for, according to them, whatever seems to be advantageous to one nation must be injurious to the other. This is not going beyond even orthodox protectionist teaching. Hitherto protectionists everywhere have upheld reciprocity. They have declared themselves to be opposed only to "jug-handled free trade." They have never denied that trade is a good thing, if you have a fair chance to sell as well as to buy. It is now, for the first time in the memory of man, contended that the mere fact that a nation wishes to trade with you brings that nation under suspicion.

The suspicion in this case is that the United States, or the President and certain other public men of the United States, desire that Canada shall be annexed. It is not very difficult to find some Americans who would like to see Canada joined to the United States, and to publish a string of quotations from the speeches of such visionaries. But does the history of the American movement for reciprocity bear out the view that the movement was due to a desire for territorial expansion?

On the contrary, we find it very closely associated with commercial reasons. In 1909 the Congress of the United States, in accordance with certain pre-election promises, undertook the task of revising the tariff. The result was disappointing to those who had expected substantial reductions in the tariff. The prices of food and other necessaries of life had greatly increased. The residents of American cities and towns, accustomed to a lavish style of living, began to feel the pinch of want, and to recognize that they were confronted with the conditions of older lands. Therefore, at the first opportunity, they let the Republican party know that they were deeply dissatisfied with the new tariff. In the Congressional elections of 1910 they smote that party hip and thigh. They convinced President Taft that something must be done with the tariff; that something must be done to break the force of the charge that the tariff was the cause of the high cost of living.

In these circumstances, it was most natural that President Taft's mind should turn to reciprocity with Canada, as a country which is every year taking a more important position as a source of food. As a protectionist he would, of course, contend that he was not "giving something for nothing," that he was opening up the markets of Canada as well as those of the United States. He would try to show that the American farmer as well as the consumer of food in Philadelphia and Boston would benefit by the arrangement. And whatever he has said to the American farmer has been freely quoted in Canada.

We ought not to reject the agreement, or to accept the agreement, merely because it has been accepted by the Congress of the United States. We are to accept it or to reject it according as we believe that it will affect our own interests. We should take a similar position in regard to its allied political tendencies. Opinions of both kinds have been expressed in the United States ;annexation has' been predicted, and these predictions have been ridiculed. We, as Canadians, ought to know whether we can stand the test of enlarged trade. If we are in doubt, it would appear that there is weakness in some other quarter than trade, and that the weakness ought to be repaired by the continued infusion of British and Canadian spirit into the new nation.

STURGEON POINT ANNUAL REGATTA

LINDSAY, JULY 25.—A meeting of the Sturgeon Point cottagers was held Monday night at the rain shelter for the purpose of electing the officers and committees for the annual regatta. Mr. Wright M. Goodwin was elected president and Mr. Carlton Warner will be the new secretary. The date of the regatta will probably be on Civic Holiday, August 14. If satisfactory arrangements cannot be made with the steamboat owners, the date will be changed.

Great enthusiasm was manifested at the meeting and the regatta this year promises to be bigger and better than ever. Already those who are intending to participate in the various events are "getting busy."

The "Die Hards" In The British House Of Commons

(Toronto star.)

The unparalleled demonstration of hostility exhibited towards the Premier by the rank and file of the Unionist party in the Commons, though almost disavowed by the party's leader, has a really surprising backing among Unionists who have stood high in the counsels of the party. Lord Halsbury is the titular leader of the insurgents, who are desirous of flouting at once the popular will and the advice of the chiefs of their own party, and of rendering the constitution unworkable. Now Lord Halsbury, nepotist as he proved himself in office, was Lord Chancellor for something like seventeen years, and during that very lengthy period he displayed remarkable sagacity, and judgment, as well as an ability which was recognised by opponents no less than by his friends. Hence it is not a little strange that he should give his countenance, and, in fact, actually incite, to any dying-in-the-last-ditch proceedings, foredoomed as they are to utter futility. And that Lord Selborne, who is far from an envenomed politician, as a general rule, should be found in that galley is equally odd. Lord Salisbury and the Dukes of Marlborough and Somerset are noted for their hot-headedness, but Lords Halsbury and Selborne are in a different category. The ringleaders of the die-hards in the Commons, moreover, comprise men whom one would have expected to accept the inevitable with something more of statesmanship. Mr. Smith is as long-headed as any man in the House, and what looks in him like reckless audacity is never assumed without a purpose, while Mr. Austen Chamberlain, who is undoubtedly acting as his father's mouthpiece in the matter, is, by nature, the reverse of infatuous. That the never-say-die idea originated in Birmingham is in itself extraordinary, having regard in the language Mr. Chamberlain, in other days used to hold about the peers. But there is doubtless method in this seeming madness. The farmers, the clergy, and the publicans are, next to the landlords, the main sources of Tory strength, and they all are distinguished by a certain stubbornness which has inspired the alert Mr. Smith and the pushful Mr. Chamberlain to disregard Lord Lansdowne's counsel—although, to do Mr. Chamberlain justice, it is now pretty generally agreed that his inflexible Toryism was one of the main obstacles to the reaching of an agreement by the abortive Veto conference. Mr. Balfour has not as yet fully declared his mind, though there can be little doubt but that he agrees with Lord Lansdowne as to the course which prudence dictates at the juncture, and Lord Curzon, than whom, aside from his prejudices, there are few abler men in British public life, has frankly advised submission to the inevitable. But Mr. Balfour is easily "squeased," particularly when the pressure is exerted from Birmingham, and Messrs. Chamberlain and Smith are more cognisant of Tory sentiment in the constituencies than he is. And it may be that he will yet and not for the first time, have to "eat the leek," and acquiesce in the leadership of his "followers". Indeed, his message to his constituents referring to the "special burden of work," which the unexpected turn which matters political have taken "within the last few hours" has placed on his shoulders may not improbably pave the way for some pronouncement to that effect on his part. It need hardly be said that if the Tories unite in further unreasoning resistance, to the Veto bill when it again comes before the peers, the effect will be to further solidify the forces behind the Premier when he formally asks for the fulfilment of the pledge which he has received from his Majesty to overcome such resistance.

WHAT RECIPROCITY MEANS TO PEOPLE OF CANADA

Reciprocity has now passed at Washington. Whether it becomes law or not rests with the Canadian Parliament and people. It is worth recalling the terms of the agreement and pointing out in a general way its meaning to the two countries affected. The bill of tariff amendment, divided into three schedules, embodying a large free list on natural products, and reduced duties on food products and certain manufactures.

For farmers there will be a distinct advantage in free access to the United States market for the following, among other articles, upon which duties is now levied:

Cattle	Onions
Horses and mules	Apples
Swine	Pears
Sheep and lambs	Peaches
Poultry	Grapes
Wheat	Butter
Rye	Cheese
Oats	Fresh milk
Barley	Fresh cream.
Beans	Eggs.
Potatoes	Hay
Corn	Straw

Canadian fishermen will be rewarded by free access to the United States marked for the following products of the rich waters of the Dominion:

Mackerel.
Herrings.
Halibut.
Salmon.
Cod.
Oysters.
Lobsters.

Canadian lumbermen will gain by the free admission to the United States of the following standard products:—

Timebr, hewn, sided or squared.
Sawed boards, planks, deals.
Paving posts, railroad ties, poles.
Wooden staves.
Pickets and palings.

The mining man will find better sale for his goods by free access to United States' markets for:

Feldspar.
Mica.
Talc.
Salt.
Asbestos.

Consumers on both sides will thank the negotiators of this agreement for reduced duties on many articles now bearing varying taxes, and among them:

Meats, fresh and refrigerated.
Baconand hams.
Beef and pork, salted.
Tanned meats and poultry,
Lard.
Tomatoes and other vegetables.
Wheat flour and oat meal.
Prepared cereal food.
Bran, middlings and other offals of grain.
Macaroni and Vermicelli.
Biscuit wafers and cakes.
Agricultural implements.
Cutlery.
Paving stones.
Clocks and watches.
Canoes.
Motor vehicles.

Canada is now the third best customer of the United States. Under reciprocity we will sell more to the United States of the things we do not need, and which the United States does need; we will buy more of what we want to buy. We will continue to buy from Great Britain the fabrics and other articles with which she can best supply us. But instead of free access only to the British market for natural products we will have also the increasing demand of the United States.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

A SOCIETY called the "Gideons" which is composed of Christian Commercial Travellers has recently started a crusade to place Bibles in the guest-rooms of all the hotels in the country.

Many thousands have been gladly accepted by the managers of all classes of hotels from the most fashionable and expensive hostelries to the one night lodging houses.

In New York the Hotel Savoy received a hundred Bibles, the Plaza 700, and the Hotel Astor 800.

Now, when they get all the hotels in the country supplied, I have another suggestion for the Gideons and that is that they start a crusade to place Bibles in our homes.

I really think that everyone would be astonished if a census could be taken showing how many homes—houses I would say—are absolutely without a Bible.

You see, the furniture dealers, who advertise to fit out our young people for housekeeping at the rate of forty-nine or ninety-eight dollars for four rooms, probably don't include Bibles in that furnishing. And as for the huge family Bible which used to be such a common wedding present—well how long since you've seen one at a wedding?

But not all of the houses that lack a Bible are of the four-rooms-for-ninety-eight-dollars class. I was visiting in a beautiful house the other day, when some question of Bible history arose.

We argued over it for a few minutes and then decided to look it up. Whereupon the mistress of that beautiful place came forward and actually declared that there wasn't a Bible in the house.

I am happy to say that she did have the grace to be very much ashamed.

Family religion, it seems to me, is fast dying out.

Family prayers are almost unknown even in the most avowedly Christian homes.

Is the Bible to go out of the home too? Will we have to go to church to read the Bible some day?

If you don't believe in the Bible as an inspired book surely you do want it as the most beautiful book of moral precepts that has ever been enunciated.

A step further,—if you don't want the Bible for either religious or moral reasons, surely you can't afford not to have one of the finest pieces of literature in the English language, one of the most magnificent collections of prose and poetry ever compiled, in your home?

My friend declared that she was going to buy a Bible the very next day, but I fancy it will be safe to send the Gideons to her when they start on the home crusade.

Need I send them to your home?

"Biscuits" Begins Work For Match With Gotch

Despatches from Russia state that Stanilaus Zbyszko, the big Polish wrestler, who will be on hand to challenge the winner of the Gotch-Hackenschmidt match on Labour Day, is doing lots of hard work on the mat. He has been wrestling in Warsaw, Posen and other Russian cities, and is to finish up in London after visiting Brussels and Paris.

At Warsaw he defeated Anton Le Bare, a Frenchman, in twenty-seven minutes. Nearly 11,000 persons paid to see the match, and the gate receipts were over $10,500.

Manager Jack Herman, who is with Zbyszko, writes to say that he has come across a great many big men in Russia, several weighing 300 pounds, and that some of these fellows will make the champion hustle in a year's time. Zybesko will arrive in America about November 10th.

Gotch has already commenced preparing for his match. He is working near his home at Humboldt, Iowa. He now weighs 214 pounds and hopes to easily get off ten pounds. The big farmer is doing about fourteen miles of road work early every morning and in the afternoon finishes off with a light walk. The only foreigner in his camp is Youssoff Hassan, the young Turk, who stayed two hours and fifteen minutes with Hackenschmidt before being thrown last winter.

Jim Flynn After Middle And Heavyweight Titles

Pueblo Jim Flynn, the ferocious Italian scrapper who has fought them all, big and little, from Jack Johnson down to Bill Papke, is telling how he is going to win two ring championships before long, provided he gets two fights he is hankering for. Jim wants to fight Carl Morris for the "white hope" championship. Then he wants to meet the Kowanee Thunderbolt in a clash for the middleweight honors. To doubting Thomases who think Jim cannot make the weight for Papke, Flynn avers that he can do 160 pounds at 2 o'clock without hurting himself. As it is understood now that the above notch is the one at which Papke will defend the championship. Jim will have to be taken at his word and included in the batch of boxers and maulers who seek the crown death wrested from Stanley Ketchel.

Flynn has started light training in Chicago in the hope of an early match with Morris before one of the Eastern or coast clubs. Ufer, manager of the giant Oklahoman, is in the Southwest now with his fighter. The match is on as soon as the lucky club is selected.

Flynn startled Chicagoans with his talk about Papke, but he seems sure on the weight proposition, also confident of his ability to take blond Bill's measure. It will be remembered that Papke and Flynn fought two vicious ten-round battles at Los Angeles at the time Papke was a legitimate 158-pounder. Billy and Jim boxed at catch weights, however, and Flynn says he did not weigh over 165 pounds either time. He claims he can do that at ringside now, and that 160 at 2 o'clock would be a cakewalk for him. So beware, Bill Papke! There is a tough Italian from Colorado on your trail.

"Papke is one fellow I know I can beat," said Flynn. "I went ten rounds with him twice and was stronger at the finish both times than he was. I'll do 160 at 2 for him any time and bet him that I can beat him in twenty rounds. I surely would like a chance at the middleweight championship at that weight. Bill is one grand scrapper, but I'm tougher than he is. You just watch me trim him if I ever get him in the ring with me again."

MURPHY IS CANNED BY KOLTS

The Hamilton Herald says:

Phelan's foot was still sore from the bad spiking he received in the first game on Saturday, and he was left on the bench. Conny Murphy being sent to short. Conny's sojourn at the difficult position was a short one, for after he made two costly errors in the fourth and the crowd demanded that he be removed, and Lee thought about the same way as the crowd and Conroy was pulled out in the middle of the inning and Phelan sent out, sore foot and all. Phelan fumbled the first ball hit to him, but after that he steadied down and made a fairly good first of the job. It was Conny's farewell appearance, as he was given his release last evening, and his leaving will cause regret, for while there are better ball players on the team than Conny, none are more popular and he had the bleachers with him all the time.

Cornelius Murphy will not likely be seen in a Hamilton uniform again, and not a few will regret the fact. To a great many of the regulars it was worth the price of admission to see him on the coaching line, his antics surpassing anything that Barnum's best clown ever attempted.

BASEBALL

All Printers who are desirous of taking part in the battle here on Saturday afternoon against Lindsay, are requested to be at the Oval to-morrow (Thursday) night for a practice as the Lindsay team are a strong aggregation and it is desired that the best team should represent Peterborough. 'Nuff sed.

The Park street Athletic Club baseball team are requested to be at the Oval to-night for practice, at 6.30 o'clock.

There will be an interesting game of baseball at Riverside Park at 3 o'clock on Saturday afternoon when the Sacred Heart team, champions of the Inter-Catholic League will play a picked team from the League. The Sacred Heart team, who were undefeated in the League games, have a strong, well-balanced team who play snappy ball all the way and Saturday's game should be well worth seeing as the All Stars are the pick of the other teams in the League.

SOMETING ABOUT TY COBB THE GREATEST BASEBALL PLAYER

(By Tip Wright)

Just to start the subject, the fact might as well be stated that Tyrus Cobb, outfielder for the Detroit American League team, is the greatest living baseball player—maybe the greatest ball player who ever lived.

Detroit is leading for the American League pennant, and Ty Cobb is the reason. He wins most of Detroit's games. He risks his life every day to get around the bases and home with the winning run.

He is bound to win that game. He is peevish in defeat, exultant in victory, ruthless, arrogant, and why?

To boost Ty Cobb.

Well, that's human nature. The best way to be successful is to win success no matter how many corns you walk on. That's J. Pierpont Morgan's idea and Ty Cobb is the J. Pierp. of our national game. He wins fame and filthy lucre on the diamond like Morgan does in Wall street—by going out and getting it with a club.

Cobb uses every drop of his energy to win games and keep himself ahead. Therefore he is a popular idol in Detroit, while outsiders see his faults, but can't overlook his genius. He thanks farther ahead and faster than his rivals. For instance:

The recent four games between Detroit and Philadelphia were very important for victory meant a big advantage in the pennant race.

Cobb prepared by buying new shoes and sharpening the spikes until they were sharper than a camp-meeting razor. He showed them to a Detroit sporting writer and said:

"I'm ready for Baker (third baseman for Philadelphia. When I get on bases this series I bet he won't stop me."

Of course the story went into the papers. That was Cobb's object. Of course Baker read the story. Anyway, when Cobb undertook to steal third base the first day, Baker was over in left field hunting four-leaf clovers.

Cobb gets his energy from his mother. She has the life and vim of a girl of 20, although she's in the forties and is inclined to embonpoint (as we say on the Boulevard des Capuchins).

Tyrus was born at Royston, Ga., 26 years ago. He began his real baseball career with Detroit in 1905.

He didn't do very well at first. He was awkward and held his bat at though handling a hose nozzle for the Royston volunteer fire department. But he went ahead on his own hook. The advice from Matty McIntyre and other Detroit veterans he let in one ear and out the other. He made enemies on the team with cheerful facility.

He was sufficient unto himself. He wasn't up there to make friends. He was there to help Cobb and he worked at it morning, noon and moontime.

Now he draws $9,000 salary for eight months' ball playing and goodness knows how much he makes on the side. Whenever some Detroiter wants a nodding acquaintance with Ty he gives him a tip on the market. Tyrus took in $2,000 on one cotton deal last season.

In the summer Cobb lives in a Detroit flat with his wife and two children—Tyrus junior and a baby girl. In the winter he goes south and dabbles in automobiles and eats at banquets.

Scene: A deserted Detroit street at night. Tyrus draws up to the curb in his auto, won for his batting last season. Two dogs start a fight. It is a Lithuanian settlement and in three minutes 500 foreigners are watching the battle. Baseball? They don't know baseball from the nebular hypothesis. They don't see Tyrus because it's dark. They wouldn't know him if they saw him. What does Tyrus say?

"Darn it all, a fellow gets up in baseball and he can't go anywhere without a crowd of fans get together to rubber at him."

That's the artistic temperament and most ball players have it. Like actors, they get the exaggerated ego.

Sometimes Cobb gets exasperated ego. In a recent game he quit, went to the club house and sulked because a fan in the grandstand hissed him when he went to bat.

But the Detroit fan replies:

"Ain't he some ball player!"

Or else he swats the other fan on the nose.

WANT $12,000 FOR KELLY, STAR CATCHER

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., JULY 25—President Barney Dreyfuss of the Pittsburg Pirates, declared to-day he was not sorry that he had been compelled to pay $22,500 for Marty O'Toole, the star pitcher of the St. Paul aggregation of the American Association. The price, the largest by $10,000, ever paid for the services of a single baseball player, is likely to remain for years.

"I believe O'Toole will make a success with the Pirates from the start," said Dreyfuss. "Rube Marquard, the $10,000 beauty" seemed to have his head turned when he donated a flurry. As soon as they got his head down to normal size, he showed he was a wonderful pitcher. But I see a bigger future for O'Toole. He is a bigger man, a greater pitcher, and one who will be able to step in and help Pittsburg without taking a couple of seasons to become adjusted to the big league way of doing business.

O'Toole's plea with Dreyfuss to buy Bill Kelly, his battery partner, is said to have been pathetic. The pitcher, almost with tears in his eyes, pleaded with Dreyfuss to buy Kelly. If he could possibly see his way clear to do so. The men are almost like brothers in their affection for each other.

"It was Kelly I came here for in the first place," said Dreyfuss, "for I was not sure I would be able to land O'Toole. The fans need not be surprised if I land him, too. I can use another good catcher mighty well."

It was declared Dreyfuss, already has offered $10,000 cash for Kelly, but it is said Owner Lennon refused to consider less than $12,000, which in itself would be a record-breaking price for a backstop.

O'Toole was one of the star pitchers of the New England League in 1909, being the mainstay of Brockton that year. His spit ball and coolness under fire earned him a trip south with the Boston Red Sox of the American League in the spring of 1910, but the team was so well stocked with pitchers that he was sold early in the year to St. Paul of the American Association.

Giants Have Claim.

Cincinnati, O., July 25.—A statement issued here by John J. McGraw manager of the New York National League team, to the effect that the Pittsburg Club would not obtain the services of Pitcher Marty O'Toole of St. Paul without a fight, has been backed up by a certified check from the New York Club for $15,000, made out to the secretary of the National Baseball Commission.

Accompanying the check was a letter from President John T. Brush, of the New York club, explaining that President Lennon of the St. Paul club had entered into a verbal agreement with New York for the sale of O'Toole for $15,000, and that he desired to lay claim to the player.

Though O'Toole was sold to the Pittsburg club Saturday for $22,500, up to last night the National Commission had not been informed of the sale.

RANSOM PAID TO SAVE LIVES OF TWO MEN

Special to The Examiner

Berlin, July 25.—Two German engineers, Herr Wagner and Herr Sintes, who have been prospecting for Messrs. Mannesmann, have had a narrow escape from death at the hands of Moorish brigands in the Atlas Mountains. Herr Wagner states:

"While we were on the way to Tarndant, near Mount Elmue, a band of thirty brigands surrounded us and, pointing their rifles, demanded $200. Sintes and I tried to come to an amicable settlement by offering to leave our two mules as guarantee in their hands while we fetched the money from Tarndant and reclaimed the animals.

"But the brigands refused, and, keeping their rifles pointed at us, drove us along the roughest conceivable paths into the hills till we arrived at a lonely house belonging to Shiekh Ali, captain of the band. Our Moorish servants were then plundered, stripped of their clothes, and turned adrift naked.

"One brigand wanted to cut off my servant's finger to obtain possession of an almost worthless silver ring fixed firmly on it. But the servant rescued the finger by tearing off the ring with his teeth. The brigands then placed us in a room four yards square, and fed us on bread and water for five days. We slept on the earthen floor.

"On the fifth day the brigands having taken nearly all our clothes, the chief, with four followers, removed us to a deep, damp cellar where it was dark day and night. On the sixth day the brigand chief again appeared with several followers, bearing a jug of water and two long sharpened knives, and informed us he had sent the Kaid of Tarndant an ultimatum that unless a ransom of $500 was paid before 3 o'clock next morning both of us would be beheaded with the knives.

"They departed, locking the door, and leaving us to ponder on our approaching fate. Shortly before 3 o'clock we heard a noise outside the door, and the Sheikh of Meniala and Mulai Ammar, a friend of the Kaid of Tarndant, appeared with the brigand chief. They told us the ransom was paid, and we were liberated hurriedly.

"We left the place with our two mules along paths so rough that we were unable to mount. We were obliged to walk the whole distance. Sintes fainted from exhaustion, and we were obliged to carry and drag him the last part of the way to Mogala."

SUICIDE TOGETHER IN THEIR WEDDING GARB

Special to The Examiner.

Middletown, N. Y., July 24.—Clasped in each other's arms and dressed in their wedding clothes, Edward D. C. and Mrs. Crans, prominent residents of this city, were found dead in their bed at their home, 20 Orchard street, this city, late this afternoon. They had been dead since Wednesday. On a chair beside the bed were two glasses, which had apparently contained carbolic acid. On the same chair hung Mr. Crans' coat. The indications were that the poison had been prepared in another room, carried into the bedroom and drunk, after which the couple got into bed and, wrapping their arms around each other, awaited death.

Mr. and Mrs. Crans resided in the finest section of the city. They had been prominent socially for many years. Mr. Crans having been formerly editor of the Middletown Daily Press. He was also prominent in Republican political circles. When the bodies were first discovered it was thought that it was a case of murder and suicide, but later when two letters enclosed in one envelope were discovered it was found that the couple had died as a result of a suicide pact, which had been in their minds since March 16, 1911, at least, for one of the letters bore that date. The letters were addressed to "Executor Dr. M. Schulta." The letter dated March 16, 1911, was in effect as follows:

"My dear friend.—When our wills were drawn some time ago we expected to leave you a nice sum, but we have lived too long. Christian friends have been so scarce that everything is about gone. No work after paying taxes for years. Then when we need money our friends (as we thought) desert us. Our dear friend, only one in this Christian city has tried to help us. What are their lives? Very few are true. If I only dared to tell what I know. My dear husband is all that I have left, and he, too, is tired of life. This is a clear case of suicide for want of work to make a living and should be made public.

(Signed)

"EDWARD—JENNIE CRANS."

The second letter, evidently written just before death by Mrs. Crans, directed that no funeral services be held, and that the undertaker be requested not to disturb their bodies. It was also requested that the husband be buried beside a little daughter who died nineteen years ago, and that the wife be buried beside a son who died at the same time.

PROUD AND NOTHING TO LIVE ON

"Now, I am in my right mind, but we have nothing to live on, and we are proud," was the conclusion of the letter. The children referred to died from diphtheria on the same day, and for nineteen years the couple had made daily visits to their graves.

For twenty-five years Mr. Crans was engaged in the newspaper business, but some time ago suffered from typhoid fever, since which time he had been physically unable to earn a living. They were formerly well-to-do, and no one supposed that they were in such reduced circumstances as the letters indicate. Recently Mrs. Crans had taken up hair-dressing, but it was supposed it was more for an occupation than to gain a livelihood.

The double suicide caused a great sensation. The many friends of the couple were amazed to learn that they had harbored suicide thoughts for many months, for they had maintained a cheerful exterior, as they were seen daily on the street. That their bodies had lain five days before being discovered was due to the fact that their friends believed they had gone away for the summer. The windows of the home were open, however, and the police were notified, and on making an investigation discovered the bodies.

A purse containing several dollars and a bank book, showing that the couple had several hundred dollars on deposit, were found in a dresser. Mr. and Mrs. Crans were each about 45 years old.

SNOW IN JULY

OTTAWA, JULY 25.—Never in the memory of Ottawa citizens, until two o'clock this afternoon has snow fallen in Ottawa during the month of July. At that hour to-day tiny flakes of condensed water floated down upon this city, forming a miniature snow storm.

To anyone observing the atmospheric condition, it was evident that a snow storm was in progress. At first it was believed that rain was falling, but on closer inspection, small particles of snow could be distinctly observed coming down from the clouds above.

People on the streets raised their umbrellas, thinking it was raining, but many were the exclamations, when on closer notice it was seen that it was not rain drops but snow flakes that were falling. These flakes were of very small dimensions, but they nevertheless were pure unadulterated snow.

The temperature all during the day has been exceedingly low. At eight o'clock this morning the official thermometer at the Government observatory registered 52.9.

"Never in the history of the observatory has snow been known to fall in July," announced the weatherman. As the flakes were falling on Sparks street. So that Ottawa's first official July snow storm will be recorded as having taken place at two o'clock on July 25, 1911.

Heiress Goes To Aid Grenfell In Labrador

When Sir Wilfred T. Grenfell, lecturer at Harvard in 1911-12, called "The most useful man on the North American Continent," goes back to Labrador to minister to the poor fishermen, he will be accompanied by a beautiful Cleveland heiress to millions, Miss Constance Mather, daughter of Samuel Mather, the millionaire philanthropist.

Not only has Dr. Grenfell been able, by his wonderful gifts, to lure students from Yale and from Harvard into the dangers of frozen Labrador, to help him carry on his work of charity and uplift among the natives, but he has enlisted the services of a girl who will desert the gilded butterfly life of gay society and take up this hazardous labour.

A beautiful home on Euclid avenue, Cleveland; another on the Lake Shore boulevard, "Shoreby;" a father worth many millions, and a philanthropist beloved by all Cleveland, a social position of the first class, with the privileges that go with it, charm and beauty and great personal gifts; youth, health and vigour; admiration, adulation, the social prospects of a young girl scarcely two seasons a debutante—all these things will Miss Mather give up to go with Dr. Grenfell and his wife and baby into the heart of the icy Arctic regions.

Charmed by the heroism of the great benefactor, who has made himself many warm friends in Boston and whose warmest admirers are his Harvard friends, Miss Mather will assist him in his great work.

She hopes to supplement his labours amongst the rough fishermen in the hospitals and in the fishing shacks by work amongst the neglected children.

And Dr. Grenfell himself, not content with honorary degrees from Harvard and other universities, with knighthood from Great Britain, with honors from potentates and princes, and from the rich of all countries, will again go with his wife—who was the beautiful Miss Anna McClanahan, of Chicago—into the wilds of Labrador.

Miss Mather gave a party at her Cleveland house and invited Dr. Grenfell and his family. In the course of the evening he gave a talk to the guests.

With tears in his eyes he spoke as only the apostle of a great religion can speak, and his enthusiasm was too genuine to be anything but that of a man with his whole soul in his chosen work.

Miss Mather made up her mind then and there that she would use some of the millions of her father to help these poor, miserable people of Labrador, who suffered, froze, starved and died because of ignorance.

She told Dr. Grenfell that she wished to go with him. Only for a few months, she said, as a trial.

He tried to dissuade her—told her of the dangers—told her of the hardships. But Miss Mather smiled at his words and simply said: "I would like to go"—and Dr. Grenfell could not refuse her.

In the Strathcona, which is Dr. Grenfell's flagship, Miss Mather will go through the hardships and terrors of the Arctic regions, leaving the mission station at Battle Harbour.

Then to St. Anthony, the fishing village where Dr. Grenfell makes his base of operations, and which is the central settlement among the fishing villages of Labrador and cold northern Newfoundland, where the most desolate landscape of all the middle Arctic is to be found.

Nevertheless, Miss Mather is not in the least appalled at the fearful risk, believing that in the work some great good will be accomplished which no mere climatic conditions should be permitted to hinder.

Speaking of her forthcoming tour with the "most useful man on the North American continent," Miss Mather says:

"I am going to Newfoundland to supplement the missionary work of Dr. Grenfell, who has laboured there for a good many years. I shall be the guest of Dr. and Mrs. Grenfell. No one has as yet undertaken a work among the children of Newfoundland, and I hope to be able to do something there and in that way."

Motored From Erie P.A.

The following party motored from Erie, Pa., and arrived at the White House yesterday: Dr. E. B. Fletcher, Carl Theilman, M. F. Smith, W. L. Benedict, F. M. Feasler and F. M. Lavoe, of Erie, and Geo. Wilson, of Pittsburg, Pa. The party made a record trip from Erie to Peterborough, in about a day and a half, travelling only until about 7 o'clock in the evening. They came via Hamilton and Niagara, but did not touch the former place. They had a full camping outfit and provisions and were bound for a point about five miles above Buckhorn. They left here about 10 o'clock this morning for Buckhorn, where they will spend a week or so camping

The Career Of Frank Chance, "Peerless Leader"

The collapse of Manager Frank Chance of the Chicago Cubs in Cincinnati recently and the subsequent orders that he must quit the game undoubtedly marks the passing of one of the greatest all around players and field generals that ever appeared on th diamond. The recent collapse was the final stroke in a series of misfortunes which have bothered the leader of the Cubs since the opning of the 1911 campaign, and it means that the once great frame has stood its last severe diamond strain.

Chance's trouble dates back to the first game between the Cubs and the Reds played at League Park, Cincinnati, April 20th last. In the sixth inning of that contest he was hit on the back of the head by a pitched ball thrown by George Suggs and almost knocked out. He finished the game and also played the next day, but on the third day he was forced to give up after five innings, and he laid off for a couple of weeks. When the Reds played in Chicago a little later he was still out of the game, and Vic Saier was playing first base.

When the Cubs went on their Eastern trip in May Chance got back into the game, though in poor condition to do so, being constantly troubled with shooting pains in his head and with severe headaches. All through that trip he did not sleep an average of two hours a night, but he stuck in the game until he had placed his team in the lead, when he retired again, sending Holman to first and acquiring Goode from Boston to play centre field. He intended to keep out of the line-up for some time, but when the Cubs lost four out of six to Pittsburg two out of three to St. Louis and the first game to the Reds on the recent trip the great leader could not stand for inaction: He got back into action immediately and led his club to a close victory. On the following day during practice he collapsed.

Chance will undoubtedly continue to hold the reins of the Chicago team and endeavor to build up a successor to the wonderful machine that has been badly shot to pieces since the beginning of last season. But as a bench leader Chance can never shine as he did on the field, and the change from field to bench removes a great general from active play.

For many years Chance has been known as the "peerless leader," and the title is well deserved. He was born about thirty-two years ago at Fresno, Cal., and his entire career as a professional ball player has been spent with Chicago. He first attracted attention as a diamond artist while a member of the University of Washington team about twelve years ago, and he left college to join the Chicago team. At that time Chance was a catcher, and he was used to a considerable extent behind the bat. Frank Selee, a great judge of ball players, was at that time beginning to mold together the machine that later won four league championships and two world championships. Selee decided that Chance was cut out for a first baseman and shifted him to that position, which he has since played with so much success. When Selee left the Chicago team during the season of 1905 Chance was named as his successor, and he has since directed the destinies of the Cubs. Since Chance has been in charge the Cubs have never finished below third place.

In 1905, his first year at the helm, Chance brought his team to third place, close behind New York and Pittsburg. In 1906, 1907 and 1908 the "peerless leader" gained his name by leading the Cubs to three successive championships, and in the last two of these years they won the world's championship by post-season victories over the Detroit Tigers. In 1909 the Cubs were defeated in the world's series by the White Sox. In 1909 Pittsburg nosed the Cubs out of their fourth successive championship, but Chance's men finished a close second. Last year they again won the National League championship, but were defeated in the world's series by the Philadelphia Athletics.

Chance is a born fighter, a determined, able and magnetic leader of men, who could always inspire his men with extraordinary enthusiasm, get the best work out of them and always hold their good will. As a field leader it is doubtful if his superior ever lived. Added to these qualities, Chance has always ranked as a high class fielder and a powerful batsman. He played no favourites, never let sentiment get the better of his baseball judgment—in fact, he combined all the qualities of an ideal baseball general. His departure from the field will leave a big void in baseball.

Something About Freddie Welsh

San Francisco, July 22.—The pen is mightier than the sword. This is a gem of wisdom that crops up every now and again and fades away unchallenged.

Now we have Freddie Welsh, British Queensberry exponent, who is eager to prove that the squash is mightier than the steak.

Freddie is to be Ad Wolgast's next opponent in a championship fight to be held Thanksgiving Day at Los Angeles. Freddie is a vegetarian. At a banquet given by Wolgast the day after the fight with Moran all the guests with one exception regaled themselves on milk-fed chicken, terrapin and Virginia ham. The exception was Freddie Welsh, and, as some one remarked, he appeared to be pecking at the table decorations. His piece de resistance was a sheaf of watercress.

Freddie intends to train for Wolgast on strick vegetarian principles. It is within the bounds of possibility when drying out for a fight that he will be found picking at the petals of a boiled artichoke and murmuring, "He lams me, he lams me not."

Freddie says he has been a "vegetarien" ever since he began fighting, and that if he ever strayed from the path he had marked out for himself, it was because he could not obtain the food he desired. In training camp it is different. Freddie always has a purchasing agent who explores the nearest market for Brasilien nuts, rosy cheeked apples and succulent lettuce.

He resents the imputation that, because of his notions of diet, he will be able to manage with a vegetable cook instead of a high-salaried chef. Freddie says he thrives better and fights better on bloodless viands.

LEARNED BOXING IN AMERICA

Welsh points out that, while he is always spoken of as an English or Welsh fighter, he learned the trade of the ring in the United States. Here is the way Freddie tells the story of his pugilistic life:

"I was taught boxing at school in the country, but I gained all my experience on this side of the water. Anything I know of professional pugilism was learned in America. I had my first professional engagement in Philadelphia on Dec. 21st, 1905. I have modeled myself after the best of men that I have met. At first I was imbued with the notion that the only way to box was in the old English way—the straight-from the-shoulder method.

"They don't fight that way over here, as I discovered. I have not changed my ideas as to the benefits of boxing as taught in my own country, but when in Rome it is advisable to do as the Romans do. I have learned to blend the English, or orthodox, style and the un-orthodox style of the American ring, and as a consequence I'm quite at home with almost any kind of a boxer I may be sent against."

Freddie thinks Al Wolgast a wonderful little ringman, but at the same time believes that Freddie Welsh carries as many guns as the Michigan wildcat.

HAS STUDIED INFIGHTING

"Once blows are exchanged, Wolgast is in his element. He is all there in inside work. I have made a study of this kind of fighting and I am by no means convinced that Ad is better at it than I am. I think I am as resourceful as he is and I possess as many changes of style. If I find that he is my master at close fighting, I'll soon change off to some other method. I know Ad Wolgast and have known him during all his fighting career. We started in at the business about the same time and I have seen him fight quite often.

"Of course, you can't always tell how things are going to turn out. But this I do know—that it was the ambition of my life to box Battling Nelson when the Dane was champion I could not bring Nelson to terms and in the meantime Wolgast got the chance and proved himself to be a better man than the Battler. When Wolgast gained the title I made up my mind to challenge him at the first opportunity. I kept this thing in view, and now that I have secured a match with him, I feel as though I had achieved something I had been working for and hoping for.

"When I feel that way about it, it is the best evidence that I am not haunted with a suspicion I am going to lose. It may sound like boasting, but I do not think there is a man living who can beat me at my own weight. The only mistakes I made were when I allowed my opponents to come in several pounds above my notch."

IS THERE ANY REASON FOR COMPLAINT?

Editor, The Examiner:

Do you consider it fair that a man should be fined for his industry, provided, of course, that his industry is for the well being of the town? I shall illustrate what I have in mind by two examples of actual fact and would like to have an expression of opinion from you editorially, and also from as many of your readers as may care to reply through your columns.

Our city assessors have made their rounds. They have done their work, as per orders. Let us consider if these orders, or the work resulting from the orders, are fair.

Fined For Improvement.

A year ago a certain house and lot in this beautiful city of Peterborough was in a run down state and in need of repair. It changed hands and the new owner installed some improvements — amongst others, a coat of paint. On the strength of these improvements his assessment is raised $200 this year. Can you tell me where the justice is in this proceeding? The improvements that have been made add greatly to the general appearance of the city. Can we expect him to make any further improvements when treated thus to an increased assessment?

Assessment Raised—Is It Just?

Another case: This same party had a vacant lot. It was assessed at $350. He built a house on it. The assessor has come along and increased the assessment by $1650. What do you think about that?

The assessor only did his duty! Certainly. On the other hand are we ratepayers of Peterborough doing ours? Shall we continue to allow this iniquitous system to continue?

Vacant Lots Vs. Houses.

Is it better for the town that this lot in question should be built upon? Or, would it be better for everyone if it had been kept vacant? Can we expect people to invest money in new houses simply to be taxed heavily, and forthwith, for the improvement and benefit they contribute to the city?

The Remedy.

For all this evil, which we are heaping upon ourselves, there is a remedy. It is to place all taxes upon the land—upon the land values. Then the man who builds will pay taxes, no more, no less, than his neighbour who owns that vacant lot beside his new building and which lot is being increased in value by that new building to which the owner of that vacant lot has contributed not the slightest

How It Works Elsewhere.

Two of the most progressive and rapidly growing cities of Canada today have done away with this old time injustice of taxing improvements—of "fining" industry. These cities are Vancouver and Edmonton. All of the taxes in these cities are collected from the land values only. The holder of a vacant lot pays the same taxes as his neighbour beside that lot on whose lot a house or other structure has been erected. What is the result? (Your readers may ask). It results in a great number of houses being built and very few vacant lots being held for very long for speculative purposes. It means rapid growth and good times for everybody in these cities.

Let Us Have It In Peterborough.

Our ratepayers and city fathers will do well to consider this matter and adopt the idea of land values taxation at the earliest possible date. We in Peterborough do not want to lag behind. We want our town to grow and to be the best city in Canada—which it can be made by the introduction of a few reforms amongst which, the greatest and most needed is, that of this fair and just means of taxation to replace the barbarous and town-killing method now in vogue within our city.

New Life For Peterborough.

Adopt the idea of taxation of land values only, leave improvements free in Peterborough and we will enter on a new lease of life and a period of unprecedented prosperity. Vacant lots, like the one at the corner of Charlotte and George, will be built up much to our mutual advantage. Owners of such lots will soon tire of paying what will be their rightful tax, upon vacant property—they will build and progress, or give way to others who will. Our citizens can then build houses and they can improve their old houses without being made to pay taxes for another.

Let us encourage—not discourage—industry within our bounds; let us ring about this much needed reformation in our system of taxation—and then watch us grow! Others will then come to grow with us.

"BOOSTER."

TYRANNY OF TOBACCO

By Jim Crow.

We all know delightful people, whose brilliant gifts might have carried them to the direiest heights, but whose habit of fuddling themselves with overdoses of grape-juice destroys their brains, reputation, self-respect, and even their capacity to enjoy other vices. This seems an unfortunate misapprehension of values. But if people like staggering about the streets and inviting the hostility of policemen, seeing two painted harridans on the stage instead of one, vitiating their palates until they cannot distinguish between Monton Rothschild and Pommpenheimer, developing blue noses and scarlet eyes to the detriment of their flirtations, that is their affair.

BONDSMEN OF BACCY.

Anyhow, I cannot blame them, for I confess to my shame that I am in hopeless bondage to the horrid habit of taking tobacco. No slave in the market-place of Timbuctoo, no loyalist clanking his chains in the oubliettes of Belgrade, no inquisitive ocfiier eating out his soul in the fortress of Borkum, enjoys less freedom than I. If only some scientist would investigate the psychology of this obsession instead of wasting his time and my money in testing the capacity of guinea-pigs to endure pain!

SMELLY SMOKERS.

No one has ever proved any harmful consequences from smoking. I have met doctors who say that it is bad for the eyes, but others will tell you with equal confidence that that is all my eye. The worst inconveniences are that you acquire a chronic stink, beside which the aroma of the fox and the perfume of the badger recall the rose-gardens of Kasanlik, but happily you are personally quite unconscious of this, as you would be if public opinion permitted you to walk abroad saturated in patchouli or breathing sulphuretted hydrogen. I speak only, of course, from supposition and analogy, but this I do know: that since I became a water-bibber I find it very difficult to tolerate the propinquity of those whose whispers breathe stale cognehaugh, which I am told by a learned North Briton ought really to be written wiski-beethi. There are also, of course, unslightly stigmata for smokers' fingers, need for extravagant expenditure on mouth-washes, and serious risks of unpopularity when we persist in emitting noxious clouds where politeness or regulations forbid.

OSTENTATIOUS CIGARS.

Other preparations of the tobacco plant have a different influence. There is no nonchalance about a cigar. Indeed, it is aggressive, purse-proud, suggestive of City transactions, an accessory to bribery and corruption. You may offer a man, or even a lady, a cigarette as naturally, as innocently, as you would a newspaper or any other worthless trifle. Indeed, you will not surprise a perfect stranger if you ask him to give you a cigarette. But to say "Have a cigar?" is almost as impertinent a liberty as to say "Have a drink?" It can only be justified by previous intimacy of a peculiar, not to say disgraceful, kind.

PUTRID PIPES.

As for pipes, they almost require a volume to themselves. For some mysterious reason they are supposed to connote peacefulness, perhaps because it would be difficult to pick a quarrel while wrestling with a chibinque. But to my mind they suggest something even worse than peacefulness — that bovine after-breakfast stolidity which belongs to the unimaginative. Whenever I see a man with a pipe in his mouth, I know he is the kind of despecado who plays patience, nurses the stable-cat, leads little children along piers and places where they paddle.

THEY PLAYED CHESS.

The Loser Afterward Learned Without Asking Why He Lost.

Baron Hengelmuller, the Austrian diplomat, a man famous for his chess ability, one day at a house in Washington met a young man whose name he did not catch when the introductions were made. Chess was the topic of the conversation by all those in the company, and presently the young man suggested diffidently that he would be highly honored if the baron would play a game with him.

The baron consented. They sat down. After a few moves the baron looked up from the table checkmated and found the young man reading a paper. The chessmen were placed again and, after not so many moves as before, the baron looked up to find the young man reading the paper and himself checkmated.

After his dinner the baron came back. He wanted another game, being somewhat chagrined at the ease with which he had been beaten. As he came in he found the young man who had played with him that afternoon blindfolded and playing against sixteen opponents at the same time. The young man was Pillsbury.—Saturday Evening Post.

Our Sleep.

As a race we sleep too little. An infant's life is nearly all sleep. Gradually as the child grows older the hours of sleep are shortened to half the day or about eight hours. Youth until the age of twenty is reached requires fully ten hours' sleep. Although nature demands fewer hours' sleep in summer than in winter, it has been proved that eight hours of sleep are required for the average adult in good health. By this, explains the Pittsburg Dispatch, is meant not simply eight hours in bed, but that amount of good, sound, restful sleep night after night. Our power to work is intimately related to our ability to sleep, and there is no more reliable indication of sound health than the capacity to sleep naturally, and the more active and energetic the waking life the deeper the sleep.

His Light Diet.

The actor's sense of humor is always uppermost. He will jest about his hard luck, his ill luck or almost anything that offers an opportunity for a joke. Generally, too, he has courage—the courage to smile when his heart is heavy. A comedian, who was known to be in desperate straits, was invited to a social gathering one evening. When the poor actor arrived he was seen to be thinly clad, although the weather was bitter cold. He looked also as if he had not had any too much nourishment for some time. The hostess greeted him cordially.

"I am so glad to see you," she said. "How well you are looking!"

"Yes," replied the comedian; "the wind has been very nutritious of late."—Saturday Evening Post.

Boy Misses Floor in a Chicago Bank Building and Goes Down the Shaft to Death

VICTIM OFFICE BOY

CHICAGO, JULY 26.—An unidentified boy attempted to leave a moving elevator in the First National Bank building yesterday afternoon, lost his balance and fell backward into the shaft falling from the fourth floor. He died a few minutes after the fall.

The elevator was in charge of Herman Meyer. It had just started up from the fourth floor when the boy, who was about 14 years of age, forced his way through the crowd of people in the elevator, threw open the doors and jumped toward the fourth floor landing.

As he jumped his head struck the signal light at the top of the door. This threw him backwards into the shaft. As he fell he cried out, "Mother.'

The boy's cry and the accident so unnerved Meyer ,according to his story as told to the police, that the elevator ascended five floors before he could stop the car and reverse its journey to the second floor. When the car arrived at the second floor Meyer left the elevator and ran downstairs to the lobby, where he picked up the boy's body. It was lying at the bottom of the shaft. The skull was fractured and both arms were broken. He died before a doctor could be summoned.

OUR NEW COINS

King George 10 and 50 Cent Pieces to be Issued

OTTAWA, JULY 26.—Designs of King George ten and fifty cent pieces are proclaimed to-day in a special issue of the Canadian Gazette. The chief difference from the old coin is that King Edward's head is replaced by that of the present King. The coins will be issued at once. The Canadian silver dollar will not make its appearance for some weeks, as the dies have not yet been received. The dollar will be of the same size as the American dollar, and will be very similar in design to the Canadian fifty-cent piece. It is being issued to satisfy a demand from British Columbia, where the people have fallen in love with the Yankee dollars, and demand that it be duplicated in Canadian money.

ROME, JULY 27.—Official reports from the Vatican this morning state that the condition of the Pope is much improved.

THE BRITISH HOME FLEET IS ISSUED ORDERS TO COAL IMMEDIATELY

Shore Leave Has Been Stopped and There is Great Excitement in Naval Circles in England.

THE MORROCAN SITUATION

Special to The Examiner :

LONDON, JULY 27.—Leave has been stopped on the warships, and according to to-day's Globe orders were issued for the second division of the home fleet to coal immediately. This has caused excitement in naval circles and is generally interpreted to mean that the Admiralty is preparing the fleet for quick action in the event of sudden developments in the Anglo-German crisis over Morocco. Sentiment in the Moroccan situation, which originally was a French-Spanish controversy, then shifted to a French-German phase, and is now an acute Anglo-German question, was more composed early to-day than yesterday, but suddenly became more disquieting than ever. This change was caused by despatches from Berlin, telling of the belligerent utterances of the German press to-day.

Premier Asquith says that the Moroccon situation has reached a "point where it has become most difficult and exceedingly harassing unless a solution is quickly found."

NEARLY A FIGHT IN THE BRITISH HOUSE

Nationalist Asserts That William O'Brien Was Descendant of Blackguardly Informer---Independent Leader Calls His Accuser an Infamous Liar.

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, ENG., JULY 27. — In the House of Commons this afternoon William O'Brien, the leader of the Independent Nationalists, complained to the Speaker that he had been insulted by questions put to him by Thomas Lundon, a Nationalist, who asserted O'Brien was a descendant of the most blackguardly informer who ever appeared in Ireland. When Lundon refused to retract, O'Brien shouted: "You are an infamous liar and scoundrel." Lundon made a drive for O'Brien, but friends seized his coat tails and the incident closed.

FOLLOWED THE FIREMEN AND WERE ARRESTED

Two East City Youths Were Apprehended for Obstructing the Firemen While on Their Way to a Fire

A chapter of episodes marked the run of the Fire Department to the fire in East City this morning. As the teams tore up Aylmer street and just as they were about to turn the corner, a driver of a rig turned right across the road in front of the approaching fire teams. The drivers were compelled to proceed straight ahead and turn around and come back. They had got nicely started again when two horses which were attached to a milk rig and delivery rig respectively turned right across the road and were engaged in customary acquaintanceship when the fire teams drove up. This meant another delay of several minutes.

The firemen had no sooner gotten under way again when two boys, mounted on wheels, proceeded to give chase. They esconced themselves between the hose wagon and ladder truck and narrowly escaped being run over by the latter. As it was the driver of the truck had to pull up his horses.

After the fire had been extinguished Chief Howard took the two boys into custody, loaded their wheels on the hose wagon and brought them to the police station. They were given a warning and when they emerged from the Chief of Police's sanctum they were two wiser looking youths.

Nephew Of Peterborough Man Is Drowned At Victoria, B.C.

Mr. J. L. Wyatt, East City, has received the sad news of the drowning in Victoria, B. C., of his nephew, Fred Wyatt. The Victoria Times gives the following particulars of the fatality:

About 9 o'clock last night, while a large number of people on the Gorge Bridge stood looking on, Fred Wyatt, an employee of the Times, was drowned, by the upsetting of a canoe in which he and a friend, William Morgan ,were trying to stem the swift current, which flows through the Gorge.

The accident occurred just before flood-time, when a strong current was setting towards the park side of the Gorge. Only two boats were near—a canoe occupied by a lad named Wilkerson, which was moored to a rock about fifty yards away from the scene of the accident and a rowboat with two youngsters in it. Both made for the bridge at once, Wilkerson breaking a paddle in his efforts to reach there. He seized hold of Morgan, who was struggling in the water and succeeded in making shore with him.

In the meantime, James Lynn, who had been standing on the rock, near Wilkinson's boat, and had helped him push off, rushed to a canoe, which was full of water, nearby, emptied it, and in his turn made for the bridge. The row-boat, occupied by the two boys, had then arrived, but Fred Wyatt disappeared before they reached him. It was estimated by Lynn that the lad sank in about 20 seconds.

The people on the bridge did not seem to realize that Wyatt and his companion were in any danger. They shouted to the former to keep cool, and cling to the canoe, as he seems to have done, but when the rowboat approached he tried to reach it and sank.

Fred Wyatt was the only son of F. C. Wyatt, a printer, in the employ of the Times, who lives on Yale St., Oak Bay. He was nearly twenty years old and was born in London, Ont.

MERGER IS EXTENDED

Special to The Examiner.

MONTREAL, JULY 27.—It is said that the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company is extending its merger so as to control the passenger traffic when the Georgian Bay Canal is completed.

ANOTHER ACCIDENT AT PORT HOPE

PORT HOPE, JULY 26.— Mr. E. Robinson, of the local branch of the Agricultural Department, met with a very unfortunate accident yesterday afternoon. A horse belonging to Mr. S. A. Coupland and used on the rural mail route, took fright near Elmview and ran away, proceeding on his merry pace until it reached the main street here. Mr. Robinson who had been up west judging the standing crops, had just left the 4.20 train at the Midland platform. When on the crossing near the Bank of Toronto the horse came tearing along and some person on the opposite side of the street called to him of the danger. The warning and the noise of the train rather confused Mr. Robinson and he realized nothing of his perilous position until the horse crashed against him. He was thrown to the pavement with great force and suffered several severe injuries. His head was badly cut at the back and his nose broken. His side and ankle were also injured by the rig passing over him.

Mr. Robinson was removed to H. W. Mitchell's drug store, where Dr. McKinley attended to him and he was later taken to his home in the ambulance. He spent a very restful night and was much better this morning.

The driver of the rig was not injured, and none of the mail was lost.

VOTE FOR THE BY-LAWS.

To-morrow, Friday, the ratepayers will be called upon to express their opinion with regard to the three by-laws, one to provide extra breathing places for the children, the second to keep good faith with the B. F. Ackerman, Son and Company, and the third to fix the assessment of the Peterborough Lock Manufacturing Company. No ratepayer should vote against any of these by-laws. The land to be purchased by the city for small parks will increase in value every day and in ten years, if the city desired, they would be able to dispose of them for twice the amount paid. The Examiner has on previous occasions referred to the other by-laws and this reference today is to merely ask the ratepayers not to overlook voting for them all.

Three-fifths of the vote polled is required for the confirmation of the two industrial by-laws, while a majority of the vote will pass the Park by-law.

"INCREASED PATRONAGE"

The Optical institute believes that Dentistry or Optometry cannot be as well performed outside of an established and suitably equipped office, where there is no hurry, but all necessary time and skill can be employed. We believe our ever increasing patronage is due to the fulfilling of these conditions, combined with our determination to give each person our very best service and value. We are working for further increase upon the same conditions.

PETERBORO' FAMILY BEING CARED FOR IN TORONTO

(Toronto Star.)

"It's not all weddings around the Police Court," remarked Jacob Cohen, J.P., to The Star this morning. "There are sad scenes too. We had one this morning. A poor woman with six children came to Toronto from Peterborough. Her husband had deserted her recently, and was living on the earnings of a fallen woman in Toronto. In Police Court he was sentenced to serve six months in the Central prison for this. The wife heard of it and came here, though her husband was no good to her. Now we have all the family on our hands. The Salvation Army will help, and three of the older children will be accommodated for the present in the Children's Shelter. The Hebrew Benevolent Society will see that the woman is fed and clothed, but it seems tough that Toronto should have to care for Peterborough's poor in this way."

In answer to the above complaint by the Toronto authorities, Chief Thompson informs the Examiner that this family lived in Peterborough only three months or less, and in the first place came from Toronto, where they had previously made their home. The family while here were in destitute circumstances and had been helped several times ,by the relief officer, and as a matter of fact, the local authorities are disposed to regard the above complaint as being the reverse of the circumstances. At present time there are several Toronto people recorded as having been helped in this city.

The Chief located the two men about eleven o'clock and placed them under arrest. They had none of the jewellery on them when searched but the chief is holding them until he receives further instructions.

PAINTING DIALS OF CITY CLOCK

The painting of the dial of the city clock was watched with much interest to-day. It was affected by a scaffold swung from ropes, which were attached to the bottom of the cupola. Two men performed the work. Only the east dial has yet been painted and this afternoon the men were engaged in painting the corners and framework. The distance from the scaffold to the ground is 85 feet.

THINKING PEOPLE

People are now beginning to realise that in order to secure perfect optical aid, something more is necessary than an examination in which are used a few Sight-Testing Charts.

Intelligent people know that skill, experience and care, directed according to a carefully planned system, are necessary in order that clear, safe and perfect vision may be absolutely assured.

Our system of Scientific Sight-Testing is the result of painstaking research. It reduces the possibilities of error to a minimum, ensures clearer vision for you and perfect fitting glasses that are guaranteed to give you the comfort sought. There is a proof of this in the fact that we can point to thousands of patients in this city and vicinity. The testimony of your town's people should appeal to you.

If we cannot help you, we say so. If we can, we do so thoroughly. This is one of the main principles which has gained for us confidence. Each and everyone we have fitted with glasses will testify to the care and skill exercised in their case, and the benefit they have received. They have found our methods to be the most reliable, and our treatment to give the utmost satisfaction.

Therein lies our Success.

Prices are entirely moderate.

We are not transient, but permanent residents of this city, you can always find us when you want us, we are not here to-day and away to-morrow. When we guarantee the glasses we sell (which we do in every case) you know you have a reliable guarantee. We are not in business simply to "sell glasses." The retention of your patronage and of your commendation are far more valuable to us.

Appointments can be made by phone. Office, Bell 332, Residence 636.

PORT HOPE'S HARBOUR.

(Toronto Star.)

President Bush, of the Standard Ideal Company at Port Hope complains that manufactories there cannot get coal in by water because the harbour is not dredged. Yet Mr. Bush though he says he is neither Liberal nor Conservative, is the head and front of the forces opposing reciprocity in that town, and, therefore, the chief opponent of a measure calculated to develop that harbour by cross-lake trade. He objects to increased trade with the United States, yet complains that he cannot get his own coal from there by the easiest route. The tariff may rightly be compared to Port Hope's undredged harbour. Both are obstructions to trade, and force it to go by unnatural routes. The Government proposes to dredge a channel in the tariff. But Mr. Bush says "nay" and tries to persuade others to say the same.

WHAT DID THEY EXPECT?

(Ottawa Free Press.)

The Opposition in the House took up considerable time yesterday with a protest because the official report of the full proceedings of the Imperial Conference had not been laid before Parliament.

It was in vain that the Premier replied that he had no control over the preparation of the volume. That it was especially stipulated that it should be prepared by the officials of the Colonial office, and that he could not present the document until he received it. What did the Opposition expect? The idea the man in the gallery got was that Sir Wilfrid should have delayed his departure for Canada in order to supervise the actual type-setting and printing of the report.

That is a high ideal to which to raise the Premier of a daughter state of the British Empire, is it not? To make him a supervisor of the work which he has already passed in proof.

What would the Opposition in England, even in these days when that Opposition is proving its antagonism to the will of the people, say, if the proposition were put up to them, as it was to Sir Wilfrid Laurier yesterday, that it was a delegate's duty to stay by the job until the book was prepared by a secretary.

Laurier is not a printer; he is a statesman; and he has therefore to follow the usages of diplomacy. The Opposition would make him not only a typesetter and a revisor but an operator of a printing press as well.

Sir Wilfrid cannot produce that which he has not. He will produce the report of the Conference just as soon as it reaches him through the proper channel, and when he does there will be no longer any talk as to what he had to do with the presentation of the report to the Canadian Parliament. Then will come the justification of an attitude which has been endorsed by the whole Empire and which is the embodiment of that for which Liberals and the whole Empire stand, that of co-operation and co-ordination within the Empire.

A SCENE AVOIDED.

A scene in the House of Commons may be created by a very little thing, or it may be avoided by common sense, says the Toronto Star. Mr. Fielding has given a good example of the latter procedure. In the course of a debate on reciprocity and obstruction, he said that the Opposition had been shouting for six months for an appeal to the people; now they were making it clear that they did not want such an appeal. "The greatest terror of their lives was, that they would be dragged before the people."

Then up sprang Mr. Cowan, of Vancouver, and shouted that the Minister had dared to make a statement which he and everyone knew to be untrue. Of course, this is unparliamentary. There was an uproar and a chorus of "Take it back," and the uproar might have gone on for an indefinite time if Mr. Cowan had not issued a modified version of his charge.

But when Mr. Fielding resumed his speech, he calmly intimated that it did not matter much. He said that he was not very sensitive about interruptions, and in nine cases out of ten would sooner allow the interruption to pass than to raise an issue on it. And this is the sensible view. Take the question in point. It was really a question, not of veracity, or of honour, but of opinion. Mr. Fielding says the Opposition are afraid of an appeal to the country, and Mr. Cowan says they are not. Mr. Cowan's interruption may be taken as an intimation that he personally is not afraid. You cannot either prove or disprove it. A parliamentary committee, with the assistance of all the psychological experts in the country, could not decide which members are afraid of an election and which are not. Possibly some are not afraid now, but will be afraid later on. Possibly they may feel more or less brave at different times of the day. A good night's sleep or a dinner may strengthen hope. What's the use of trying to settle the profound and complicated psychological question by reference to Bourinot?

On a thousand platforms during the next election, Liberals and Conservatives will be hurling at each other this taunt that the other fellow is afraid of the election; and after the election the loser will declare that he has suffered from over-confidence. Let us rejoice that a reputation for a stout heart is valued almost as highly as a victory at the polls.

AMERICAN VIEWS OF RECIPROCITY.

Now that President Taft has signed the bill ratifying the reciprocity agreement, it is interesting to notice that American journals, with great unanimity, give him credit for what he has accomplished and take a sane view of the future of international trade on this continent. They do not indulge in any roseate predictions, but express with great sobriety the opinion that trade will go on at first very much as before, and will increase after a time as individual traders accommodate themselves to the changed conditions. In fact, they allege the question of the agreement will disappoint alike the expectations of the optimists and the fears of the pessimists. It will shed its beneficence as quietly as the sunshine and the rain do in the promotion of natural growth.

In the view of Mr. J. J. Hill, of the Great Northern railway, the United States has profited more by what the treaty has prevented than by what it has secured. What Mr. Hill means is that if the United States had refused to ratify the agreement there would have been a revival of the movement to bring about Imperial federation. Perhaps there would; but it would never have been successful, no matter what the Senate did with the agreement. Such a movement would not be successful now, even though the Dominion Parliament were to turn it down permanently. The tariff reform movement in Britain has been effectually killed, partly by the Lloyd George methods of finance and partly by the split in the Unionist party over the passage of the veto bill. Meanwhile the British preference will go on undisturbed, no matter what else may happen.

There is not heard anywhere in the United States in this connection a single suggestion of the annexation or absorption of Canada. It is everywhere recognized that the ratification of the agreement by the Dominion Parliament is a matter for Canadians to settle themselves. Sensible Americans, like sensible Canadians, would like to see greater freedom of trade between these two countries, but if reciprocity is defeated now, both countries will get on, though not so well, without it. American publicists look with good humoured surprise at the childish exhibition which the opponents of reciprocity are making of themselves.

HAMILTON AVIATION MEET TO COMMENCE THIS EVENING

An aviation meet opens in Hamilton this evening. Mayor Lees will officiate at the formal opening, and Controllers Gardner and Cooper have signified their desire to be passengers in a flight.

Several aviators arrived yesterday, including J. A. D. McCurdy with two new bi-planes, Chas. F. Willard from Utica, New York, with a fine bi-plane, and Ladis Lewkowics with his high powered Bleriot, with which he soared recently on Long Island to an altitude of one mile and hovered at this height in the air for upwards of an hour.

Hamilton is greatly interested in the meet and extensive preparations have been made by the management. The aviation field is situated on the Sc. radial carfare line, midway between Hamilton and Burlington beach, adjoining the Tuckett farm which has been recently purchased by the city as a park. The course runs out on Burlington Bay.

Some of the flyers at this meet will come to the Toronto meet which opens at Donlands on August 3rd. A number of other entries have been received for the Toronto meet.

FUNERAL TO-DAY

The funeral of William Albert Sullivan took place this morning from the family residence, 47 Crescent St. Service was held at the Sacred Heart church, at which Fr. McCauley officiated, after which the interment took place at St. Peter's R. C. cemetery, where Dr. O'Brien officiated. There were many beautiful floral tributes of many designs, showing the esteem in which he was held. The pallbearers were composed of four of his school fellows. The relatives have the sympathy of a large circle of friends.

DR. CHASE'S OINTMENT

HOW THE KING AND QUEEN WON FAVOUR IN IRELAND

London, July 24.—Now that Ireland's "cead mile failthe," straight from the warm heart of the Celts, Wales' homage offered in raucous sounding consonants, and bonny Scotland's ringing cheers from Highlanders and Lowlanders alike are pleasant memories to King George and Queen Mary, the newspapers of the United Kingdom are as one in declaring that from the day on which the monarchs were crowned in old Westminster Abbey, the King, by his unfailing tact, and the Queen, through her womanly kindness and consideration, have won the hearts of all their subjects with a celerity that seems marvellous when one reflects upon the coldness with which their names were received six months ago.

A special correspondent in Dublin vividly portrayed the tumultuous welcome of the Irish, but the Irish are not always enthusiastic, and when the cheers died away soon would have forgotten all about the memorable visit were it not for the human, sympathetic attitude of the royal visitors, who repaid cordiality in kind, and then thrilled the heartstrings of the Celt, by their deep consideration for the poor and their earnest and manifest desire to better the conditions of the lowly.

LOYALTY FORGOTTEN

When King William, Queen Victoria and King Edward visited Ireland, they, too, were welcomed with noisy hurrahs from the mob, and loyal though more reserved greetings from the nobility and gentry, but they found no permanent lodgment in the hearts of the people. When they left the pageant became a bit of history, that's all.

King George, though he lacks in a degree the magnetism that was one of the most alluring qualities of the make-up of his late father, thawed visibly as he realised the intensity of the enthusiasm of the poorest of the poor in the terrible slums which are situated in the centre of Dublin.

His night ride into that wretched quarter made a deep and lasting impression upon him. So keenly was he touched by the misery that was manifest among the army of tatterdemalions, who exhorted God to save him, that he called upon his gracious Queen to follow in his footsteps that she might realise, too, the depth of suffering among the poor in the heart of their Irish capital.

The fruit born of these remarkable visits is the announcement by the King, speaking for himself and Queen Mary, that they would devote themselves during their reign to the uplifting of the downtrodden. That's why the new King and Queen can count upon the Irish. True, the Nationalists may continue to uphold or upset British government, but they will not be able to loosen the hold of the throne upon the Irish people if the sovereigns continue the benign policy of visiting the ill and comforting the afflicted among the millions who look to them for aid.

Of course, the monarchs visited the Leopardstown races, and joined with the Irish, who dote upon a horse race or a "shindy," in the enjoyment of the sport of kings. But the glorious day of Leopardstown was a mere incident of the royal visit, the major portion of the time being devoted to inspection of hospitals, almshouses, and the habitats of the poor.

ADMIRES "SLUM PARK"

There was a court at Dublin Castle attended by brave-looking, gold-bedizened lords and by beautiful ladies, in a land where nearly all womankind is beautiful; there was a great garden party, in which the dresses worn by the women rivalled the splendors of Ascot day, and there were other brilliant functions at which the brilliant uniforms of the men, the magnificent dresses of the women, gleaming coronets and glittering gems made the beholder think he was in fairyland. The King and Queen were present at all of these, but manifested little interest in the "passing show." Their hearts were touched only when they saw the park in the slums given by Lord Iveagh as a breathing spot for unfortunates, when they dedicated the dispensary for consumptives, which is a memorial of the bounty of the late Peter Fenelon Collier, of New York, and when they accepted the princely gift of $250,000 from "Iveagh of Slum Park" to extend free hospital work among the poor.

That's why King George and Queen Mary are loved in the green isle, and when the mind pictures of madly cheering thousands of dashing, soldierly displays, and of brilliant assemblages of the elect, have faded, their majesties' work for the poor will be the sweetest memory of their visit to the Irish.

SAYS ANNEXATION CRY IS JOKE IN ENGLAND

(Montreal Herald)

That the annexation cry raised in some quarters has never been taken seriously in England was the statement made to The Herald this morning by Mr. Raleigh Phillpotts, a well known London (Eng.) lawyer, who is at the Windsor Hotel. "For my part," he continued, "I think that is all nonsense. People in London did talk, and talk a great deal, about reciprocity, especially before their attention became so engrossed with their own political affairs. Of course, the Tariff Reformers, and those in favour of Imperial Preference raised a cry about lost opportunities, and said: "If this act goes through it will tend to bring Canadian trade nearer the United States'; but on the other hand some of us who are also lovers of Canada feel that it is a good bargain for Canada, and that we would like to see her make a good bargain. As to 'annexation,' that is nonsense. Apparently, reciprocity with the United states will make Canada stronger and richer than ever before; and the time when she is stronger and richer, will not be the time when she can be annexed."

Asked about the political crisis in England, Mr. Phillpotts answered: "I speak with no authority, but only as an ordinarily intelligent man on the street, and this is the opinion of the average man on the street, that Balfour is the man to hold the Unionist party together. He is quite right in showing caution over the question of Tariff Reform. He has proved a good leader, and there is no one of weight to put in his place. I am sorry for the growing feeling of the more ardent Unionists, who want some one to get busier and hope that the saner councils of Balfour and Lansdowne still prevail. Disloyalty to Balfour is a mistake. Countries are ruled by sovereigns and statesmen, not by shouting politicians. We have got a very sensible and hard-working young King, and it will be very bad if English opinions are to be swayed by these shouting politicians. Such shoutings are inconsistent with English dignity and strength."

With particular reference to the recent uproar in the House, Mr. Phillpotts said: "This excitement is only a passing phase. It is really very remarkable how little the man on the street has been apparently moved by this crisis. The idea that the Unionists can make the Radical party ludicrous by creating an enormous number of peers is absolutely unsound. The thing which is wanted is to maintain the old-established things in as high a state of efficiency as possible. To try to water the House of Lords by swamping it with new peers is nonsense.

"Why reform the Lords at all?" Mr. Phillpotts asked. "There are no finer speeches in history than those delivered in the House of Lords on the Budget Debate."

Asked what he thought would be the outcome of the present struggle, Mr. Phillpotts replied: "I think the Parliament Bill will go through, if the financial details can be settled: and I think there will be some measure of Home Rule. The financial question is serious, but I believe that both parties will agree to some new arrangement of the House of Lords."

ASSISTANCE FOR BREEDERS OF THOROUGHBRED HORSES

During recent years many appeals have been made to the Honourable Sydney Fisher, Minister of Agriculture, by horsemen anxious to bring about an improvement in the quality of our light horse stock and who are of the opinion that for this purpose an infusion of thoroughbred blood is essential. Recognising the force of these appeals as well as the importance of the subject, Mr. Fisher has decided to grant assistance under certain specified conditions to persons maintaining thoroughbred stallions for service in the various provinces.

In deciding this step the Minister has been largely influenced by the fact that while stallions of other recognised breeds, when in capable hands, are as a rule fairly profitable, this is seldom the case with regard to the thoroughbred, the advantages of breeding to horses of this class being unfortunately not fully realised by the present generation of Canadian farmers.

The lack in our light horses of the quality derivable only from the infusion of thoroughbred blood is the subject of adverse comment by all European horsemen who visit the Dominion with a view to investigating its possibilities as a field for the purchase of horses whether for military purposes or for ordinary saddle or harness use. In this connection it should be remembered that while horses for the last named, or in fact, for any of these purposes, may well be bred from sires other than thoroughbred, it is of importance that on the side of the dam there should, in order to produce the best results, be, in such cases, a strong admixture of thoroughbred blood.

The conditions under which assistance will be given are as follows:

(1) All horses on account of which aid is given by the Department must be registered by the Thoroughbred Stud Book of the Canadian National Live Stock Records.

(2) Horses shall be of good size, quality and conformation and shall be free from all hereditary unsoundness; these conditions to be ensured by submission annually to a thorough, careful examination either at the hands of the Veterinary Director General or such other members of the veterinary staff of the Department, or other persons as the Minister may from time to time appoint for this purpose.

(3) Horses so approved shall be duly and properly advertised to stand for service of mares, under the ordinary and general conditions usual in the districts in which they are to be kept, at an annual service fee (except in the case of thoroughbred mares) of not more than $10 to ensure, such service fee to become due and payable only when mares prove to be in foal.

Any person, firm or corporation owning or controlling any thoroughbred stallion in regard to which all of the conditions above set forth shall have been duly and properly fulfilled, shall, on production of satisfactory evidence thereof and of the fact that a reasonable number of mares, other than thoroughbred mares, have been served during the season, be entitled to receive at the close of each such season the sum of $250 from the funds of the Live Stock Branch. If, in the event of a horse dying or becoming incapacitated for service during the season, an approved substitute is immediately placed in the same district, the Minister may, after due consideration of the circumstances, authorise the payment of the subsidy above mentioned.

The necessary forms will be furnished on application to the Veterinary Director General and Live Stock Commissioner, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

ISN'T she funny?
And yet isn't she pathetic?
Whom am I after this time?

A rather common type — the girl who is forever fancying that some married man or other is smitten with her.

Sometimes she is a very pretty girl who is so used to admiration that she fancies even those who have no right to are falling in love with her.

But more often she is a less attractive girl who hasn't had enough normal admiration and consequently is forever salving her wounded pride and satisfying her inevitable craving by imagining that these captive husbands are pining for her.

She tells her friends, with what pretends to be indignation, but is really smirking delight, how Mr. B. tried to flirt with her at the bridge party.

She takes Mr. L.'s cordial "Good morning" and occasional chat with her on the train as the first symptoms of a tender interest in her. In reality they are merely dictated by Mr. L.'s cheery married man sympathy for her "aloneness."

She goes to visit a young married friend and comes home and tells how Mr. S. positively neglected his wife to sit on the verandah and go walking with her. Poor Mr. S., he was only doing what his wife asked him to and finding it a hard job at that.

In the office some unsuspecting benedict finds that she particularly enjoys a certain author and brings her one or two of his latest books and even walks down to the train with her once or twice discussing them, and straightway she is sure he is the unhappy victim of her charms.

If any of her married friends get out with her for any reason at all, she has no difficulty in finding their hidden reason—they are jealous. Tom or Dick or Harry or whoever it may be, was too attentive to her at the dance or has been coming up on her verandah too often.

Poor, foolish, deluded, little girl. You have yet to learn that married men get tired of their wives and go hunting around for affinities much more often in books than in real life.

The things that means so much to you because you looked at them through the magnifying glass of your desire for imagination, probably meant less than nothing to these men.

And even if by any chance they did mean something, it is far better for you to minimise and make light of them, than dignify them by thinking and talking so much about them.

You don't want a futile or maybe a life-wrecking love for a man who has no right to give it to you. It may sound romantic, but romance in real life has a terrible, seamy, everyday suffering side.

What you really want is a normal, happy, healthy, commonplace love that means a hearthstone and babies for you.

Turn your eyes toward that goal, little girl, and long for it and work for it and forget these foolish ideas of yours and I'm sure your own will come to you much the sooner.

CHAPTER X.

A MESSAGE FROM BOUCHER

The next day Sheldon was left all alone. Joan had gone exploring Parisulay, and was not to be expected back until the late afternoon. Sheldon was vaguely oppressed by his loneliness, and several heavy squalls during the forenoon brought him frequently on to the veranda, telescope in hand, to scan the sea anxiously for the whale-boat. Between-whiles he scowled over the plantation account books, made rough estimates, added and balanced, and scowled the harder. The loss of the Jessie had hit Berande severely. Not alone was his capital depleted by the amount of her value, but her earnings were no longer to be reckoned on, and it was her earnings that largely paid the running expenses of the plantation.

"Poor old Hughie," he muttered aloud, once. "I'm glad you didn't live to see it, old man. What a cropper, what a cropper."

Between squalls the Flibberty-Gibbet ran into anchorage, and her skipper, Pete Oleson (brother to the Oleson of the Jessie), ancient, grizzled, wild-eyed, emaciated by fever, dragged his weary frame up the veranda steps and collapsed in a steamer chair. Whiskey and soda kept him going while he made report and turned in his accounts.

"You're rotten with fever," Sheldon said. "Why don't you run down to Sydney for a blow of decent climate?"

The old skipper shook his head.

"I can't. I've been in the Islands too long. I'd die. The fever comes out worse down there."

"Kill or cure," Sheldon counselled.

"It's straight kill for me. I tried it three years ago. The cool weather put me on my back before I landed. They carried me ashore and into hospital. I was unconscious one stretch for two weeks. After that the doctors sent me back to the Islands—said it was the only thing that would save me. Well, I'm still alive. But I'm too soaked with fever. A month in Australia would finish me."

"But what are you going to do?" Sheldon queried. "You can't stay here until you die."

"That's all that's left to me. I'd like to go back to the old country, but I couldn't stand it. I'll last longer here, and here I stay until I peg out; but I wish to God I'd never seen the Solomons, that's all."

He declined to sleep ashore, took his orders, and went back on board the cutter. A lurid sunset was blotted out by the heaviest squall of the day, and Sheldon watched the whale-boat arrive in the thick of it. As soon as the spritsail was taken in and the boat headed on to the beach, he was aware of a distinct hurt at sight of Joan at the steering-oar, standing erect and swaying her strength to it as she resisted the pressures that tended to throw the craft broadside in the surf. Her Tahitians leaped out and rushed the boat high up the beach, and she led her bizarre following through the gate of the compound.

The first drops of rain were driving like hailstones, the tall cocoanut palms were bending and writhing in the grip of the wind, while the thick cloud-mass of the squall turned the brief tropic twilight abruptly to night.

Quite unconsciously the brooding anxiety of the afternoon slipped from Sheldon, and he felt strangely cheered at the sight of her, running up the steps, laughing, face flushed, hair flying, her breast heaving from the violence of her late exertions.

"Lovely, perfectly lovely—Parisulay," she panted. "I shall buy it. I'll write to the Commissioner to-night. And the site for the bungalow—I've selected it already—is wonderful. You must come over some day and advise me. You won't mind my staying here until I can get settled? Wasn't that squall beautiful! And I suppose I'm late for dinner. I'll run and get clean and be with you in a minute."

And in the brief interval of her absence he found himself walking about the big living room and impatiently and with anticipation awaiting her coming.

"Do you know, I'm never going to squabble with you again," he announced, when they were seated.

"Squabble!" was the retort. "It's such a sordid word. It sounds cheap and nasty. I think it's much nicer to quarrel."

"Call it what you please, but we won't do it any more, will we?" He cleared his throat nervously, for her eyes advertised the immediate beginning of hostilities. "I beg your pardon," he hurried on. "I should have spoken for myself. What I mean is that I refuse to quarrel. You have the most horrible way, without uttering a word, of making me play the fool. Why, I began with the kindliest intentions, and here I am now—"

"Making nasty remarks," she completed for him.

"It's the way you have of catching me up," he complained.

"Why I never said a word. I was merely sitting here, being sweetly lured on by promises of peace on earth and all the rest of it, when suddenly you begin to call me names."

"Hardly that, I am sure."

"Well, you said I was horrible, or that I had a horrible way about me, which is the same thing. I wish my bungalow were up. I'd move tomorrow."

But her twitching lips belied her words, and the next moment the man was more uncomfortable than ever, being made so by her laughter.

"I was only teasing you. Honest Injun. And if you don't laugh, I'll suspect you of being in a temper with me. That's right, laugh. But don't—" she added in alarm, "don't, if it hurts you. You look as though you had a toothache. There, there; don't say it. You know you promised not to quarrel, while I have the privilege of going on being as hateful as I please. And to begin with, there's the Flibberty-Gibbet. I didn't know she was so large a cutter. But she's in disgraceful condition. Her rigging is something queer, and the next sharp squall will bring her headgear all about the shop. I watched Nos Noah's face as we sailed past. He didn't say anything. He just sneered. And I don't blame him."

"Her skipper's rotten bad with fever," Sheldon explained. "And he had to drop his mate off to take hold of things at Ugi—that's where I lost Oscar, my trader. And you know what sort of sailors the niggers are."

She nodded her head judicially, and while she seemed to debate a weighty judgment he asked for a second helping of tinned beef, not because he was hungry, but because he wanted to watch her slim, firm fingers, naked of jewels and banded metals, while his eyes pleasured in the swell of the forearm, appearing from under the sleeve and losing identity in the smooth, round wrist undisfigured by the netted veins that come to youth when youth is gone. The fingers were brown with tan and looked exceedingly boyish. Then, and without effort, the concept came to him. Yes, that was it. He had stumbled upon the clew to her tantalizing personality. The fingers, sunburned and boyish, told the story. No wonder she had exasperated him so frequently. He had tried to treat with her as a woman, when she was not a woman. She was a mere girl, and a boyish girl at that, with sunburned fingers that delighted in doing what boys' fingers did, with a body and muscles that liked swimming and violent endeavor of all sorts, with a mind that was daring but that dared no farther than boys' adventures and that delighted in rifles and revolvers, Stetson hats, and a sexless camaraderie with men.

Somehow, as he pondered and watched her, it seemed as if he sat in church, at home, listening to the choir-boys chanting. She reminded him of those boys, or their voices, rather. The same sexless quality was there. In the body of her she was woman. In the mind of her she had not grown up. She had not been exposed to ripening influences of that sort. She had had no mother. Von, her father, native servants, and rough island life had constituted her training. Horses and rifles had been her toys, camp and trail her nursery. From what she had told him, her seminary days had been an exile, devoted to study and to cheerless longing for the wild riding and swimming of Hawaii. A boy's training, and a boy's point of view! That explained her chafe at petticoats, her revolt at what was only decently conventional. Some day she would grow up, but as yet she was only in the process.

Well, there was only one thing for him to do. He must meet her on her own basis of boyhood, and not make the mistake of treating her as a woman. He wondered if he could love the woman she would be when her nature awoke; and he wondered if he could love her just as she was and himself wake her up. After all, whatever it was, she had come to fill quite a large place in his life, as he had discovered that afternoon while scanning the sea between the squalls. Then he remembered the accounts of Berande, and the cropper that was coming, and scowled.

He became aware that she was speaking.

"I beg pardon," he said. "What's that you were saying?"

"You weren't listening to a word—I knew it," she chided. "I was saying that the condition of the Flibberty-Gibbet was disgraceful, and that tomorrow, when you've told the skipper and not hurt his feelings, I qqem going to take my men out and give her an overhauling. We'll scrub her bottom, too. Why, there's whiskers on her copper four inches long. I saw it, when she rolled. Don't forget, I'm going cruising on the Flibberty-Gibbet some day, even if I have to run away with her."

While at their coffee, on the veranda, Satan raised a commotion in the compound near the beach gate, and Sheldon finally rescued a mauled and frightened black and dragged him on the porch for interrogation.

"What fella marster you belong?" he demanded. "What name you come along this fella place sun he go down?"

"Me b'long Boucher. Too many boy belong along Port Adams stop along my fella marster. Too much walk about."

The black drew a scrap of notepaper from under his belt and passed it over. Sheldon scanned it hurriedly.

"It's from Boucher," he exclaimed, "the fellow who took Packard's place. Packard was the one I told you about who was killed by his boat's crew. He says that Port Adams crowd is out—fifty of them, in big canoes—and camping on his beach. They've killed half a dozen of his pigs already, and seem to be looking for trouble. And he's afraid they may connect with the fifteen runaways from Lunga."

"In which case?" she queried.

"In which case Billy Pape will be compelled to send Boucher's successor. It's Pape's station, you know. I wish I knew what to do. I don't like to leave you here alone."

"Take me along then."

He smiled and shook his head.

"Then you'd better take my men along," she advised. "They're good shots, and they're not afraid of anything—except Utami, and he's afraid of ghosts."

The big bell was rung, and fifty black boys carried the whale-boat down to the water. The regular boat's crew manned her, and Matauare and three other Tahitians, belted with cartridges and armed with rifles, sat in the sternsheets where Sheldon stood at the steering-oar.

"My, I wish I could go with you," Joan said wistfully, as the boat shoved off.

Sheldon shook his head.

"I'm as good as a man," she urged.

"You really are needed here," he replied. "There's that Lunga crowd; they might reach the coast right here and with both of us absent rush the plantation. Good-by. We'll get back in the morning sometime. It's only twelve miles."

When Joan started to return to the house, she was compelled to pass among the boat-carriers, who lingered on the beach to chatter in queer, apelike fashion about the events of the night. They made way for her, but there came to her as she was in the midst of them, a feeling of her own helplessness. There were so many of them. What was to prevent them from dragging her down if they so willed? Then she remembered that one cry of hers would fetch Nos Noah and her remaining sailors, each one of whom was worth a dozen blacks in a struggle. As she opened the gate, one of the boys stepped up to her. In the darkness she could not make him out.

"What name?" she asked sharply. "What name belong you?"

"Me Aroa," he said.

She remembered him as one of the two sick boys she had nursed in the hospital. The other one had died.

"Me take 'm plenty fella medicine too much," Aroa was saying.

"Well, and you all right now," she answered.

"Me want 'm tobacco, plenty fella tobacco; me want 'm calico, me want 'm porpoise teeth; me wan 'm one fella belt."

She looked at him humorously, expecting to see a smile, or at least, a grin, on his face. Instead, his face was expressionless. Save for a narrow breech-clout, a pair of ear-plugs, and about his kinky hair a chaplet of white cowrie-shells, he was naked. His body was fresh-oiled and shiny, and his eyes glistened in the starlight like some wild animal's. The rest of the boys had crowded up at his back in a solid wall. Some one of them giggled, but the remainder regarded her in morose and intent silence.

"Well?" she asked. "What for you want plenty fella things?"

"Me take 'm medicine," quoth Aroa. "You pay me."

And this was a sample of their gratitude, she thought. It looked as if Sheldon had been right after all. Aroa waited stolidly. A leaping fish splashed far out on the water. A tiny wavelet murmured sleepily on the beach. The shadow of a flying fox drifted by in velvet silence overhead. A light air fanned cool upon her cheek; it was the land breeze beginning to blow.

"You go along quarters," she said, starting to turn on her heel to enter the gate.

"You pay me," said the boy.

"Aroa, you all the same one big fool 'm pay you. Now you go."

But the black was unmoved. She felt that he was regarding her almost insolently as he repeated:

"I take 'm medicine. You pay me. You pay me now."

Then it was that she lost her temper and cuffed his ears so soundly as to drive him back among his fellows. But they did not break up. Another boy stepped forward.

"You pay me," he said.

His eyes had the querulous, troubled look, such as she had noticed in monkeys; but while he was patiently uncomfortable under her scrutiny, his thick lips were drawn firmly in an effort at sullen determination.

"What for?" she asked.

"Me Gogoomy," he said. Bawo brother belong me."

Bawo, she remembered, was the sick boy who had died.

"Go on," she commanded.

"Bawo take 'm medicine. Bawo finish. Bawo my brother. You pay me. Father belong me one big fella chief along Port Adams. You pay me."

Joan laughed.

"Gogoomy, you just the same as Aroa, one big fool. My word, who pay me for medicine?"

She dismissed the matter by passing through the gate and closing it. But Gogoomy pressed up against it and said impudently:

"Father belong me one big fella chief. You no bang 'm head belong me. My word, you fright too much."

"Me fright?" she demanded, while anger tingled all through her.

"Too much fright bang 'm head belong me," Gogoomy said proudly.

Are You Anaemic or Bloodless?

If So, the Spring is a Most Trying Time for You.

Your Hope Rests in Getting the Blood Rich and Red by Using

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

Shortness of breath and fatigue with slight exertion, failure of the vital organs to properly perform their functions, and pallor of the gums and eyelids, are among the indications of anaemia or bloodlessness.

The blood is thinner and more watery in the spring than at any other season, and for this reason the person who is subject to anaemia, or lack of blood, suffers the most.

You must increase the number of red corpuscles in the blood, and this can best be done by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. This great restorative treatment does not merely stimulate the organs to renewed activity, but cures by building up the system. For this reason its benefits are both natural and lasting.

Sleeplessness, indigestion, neuralgic and sciatic pains and weakness and irregularities of the vital organs become a thing of the past when Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is used.

It is only natural that you should get strong and well when this building-up treatment is used, for it supplies to the blood in condensed and easily assimilated form the elements which go to form new, rich blood.

Your digestive system has failed to extract sufficient nutrition from the food you eat, and hence the necessity of such direct nourishment as is supplied to the blood by Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. 50c. a box. 6 for $2.50, at all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

JUNK DEALERS WILL LIKELY HAVE TO CHANGE BUSINESS PLACE

Charge Brought Against One Junk Dealer For Keeping a Place That is a Nuisance---Stench Causes Disease---"Indian" Fined $13.75---Other Cases.

Abraham Low, the junk dealer on Bethune street, was arraigned in the police court this morning on a charge of keeping a place that is a nuisance. Dr. Ames, whose property adjoins that of Low's, was called as a witness. He said that the defendant stored up old rags and bones, also bottles and old iron, and the green bones caused a stench which was almost unbearable. He further stated that this stench from the decayed flesh on the bones, made the air impure and sent forth germs of diseases all over the city. And in addition to this the bottles and other old vessels with water in them attracted the mosquitoes, and the rags are full of germs. The doctor further stated that the dry bones when piled up smelled as well as the green ones, and he thought that it was no place, in the middle of a thickly populated community, for such a business to be carried on. Low denied that there had been any green bones kept there, but the doctor stated that he was over and had seen them there all spring.

Dr. McPherson, the Medical Health Officer, then went into the box and stated that he had notified Low, and all the other junk dealers, also, that they had all this stuff accumulated without any permission. He said he had asked Low five or six weeks ago to decide where he would carry on his business, but Low had never made any effort to change.

Chief Thompson stated that all the complaints he had received were about Low's place, so in his opinion there must be cause for it.

Mr. G. N. Gordon, who appeared for the defence, asked for a remand, so the case was accordingly remanded for two weeks, when action will be taken against the other men also.

The Magistrate thought that there had been just cause for complaint, and that it had not been made any too soon.

A local man named Wm. J. Arthur was fined $13.75 for being drunk while on the black list.

SOUVENIRS OF ANCIENT TRAGEDY ARE DISCOVERED

Find at Barber's Bay Recalls Early Days When Hudson Bay Traders and Many Indians Met Death at the Hands of Savage Half-Breeds---Old Gun and Tomahawk Found in Ballast Pit.

An incident in the rough, semi-savage days of the old trading posts of the north country that has become a fearsome tradition among the Indians of the Abitibi, is recalled by a discovery by T. & N. O. workmen in a ballast pitt a Barber's Bay. In building the grade of the Porcupine branch near the Bay the men found traces of an old palisade and near it were unearthed a gun and bayonet of ancient pattern, together with a quantity of human bones.

Barber's Bay was the spot where Frederick Barber, the Hudson Bay trader, and his assistants were murdere dby half-breeds many years ago, a crime that led to the massacre of every Indian who visited the post for weeks following. When the Hudson Bay Company decided to extend their line of trading posts south from Moose Factory the spot selected for a post was on the waters of the river now known as the Frederickhouse. Barber was sent south with a party of voyagers and Indians to build the post. He chose a Lay on Frederickhouse Lake, which now bears his name, and began trading with the Indians of the district.

MURDERED THE TRADER

Just before Christmas a half-breed named McDougall and a couple of companions came to the post to trade their fall catch. They stayed for several days, and on Christmas morning Barber made them small gifts and treated them to rum. When refused more liquor they murdered Barber and his assistants, seised the fort, and proceeded to enjoy themselves.

Then began a succession of murders. Frightened that word of their crime would reach the ears of the Hudson Bay people the half-breeds killed every Indian who came to the post with furs. A number of squaws who did not go with their men on the midwinter journey to the trading post became anxious. Forming a small party they travelled over the snows to the post and were promptly seised by McDougall and his friends. One of these women managed to get away and carried the news of the murders.

MURDERED THEIR CAPTIVES

An avenging party of Indians at once started for the post, but they arrived too late. McDougall and his companions, after murdering the women they had captured, had taken flight. Then began a long chase. The murderers were traced overland to McDougall Chutes and down the Black and Abitibi Rivers to Abitibi Lake.

McDougall made the mistake of trying to carry a lot of loot away with him and was nearly overtaken. When the avengers reached the lake they found McDougall's camp. The half-breed saw tthem coming and started across th elake. During a snow flurry which lasted but a short time he disappeared and has never been seen since. The Indians gave evil spiritts credit for the disappearance, and the half-breed's ghost is supposed to still linger over the lakes.

A SEVEN-FOOT GUN

The gun found in the ballast pit is of great historical interest, and together with a tomahawk has been sent by Mr. Englehart to the Provincial Archivist. It is known as a Hudson Bay trading gun and is about seven feet in length. It is a legend that the Indian hunters in former days were required to give a pile of furs as high as the gun as the purchase price, hence the extraordinary length of the weapon

phone from Williams Bay last night. "This comet is of no public interest yet. We don't know yet what its orbit is. Therefore we cannot compute its distance from the earth or where it is headed for. As soon as the orbit is computed we will be able to figure those things out. Nowhere in this world yet has the orbit of this stranger been computed. It doubtless will be soon."

Director Frost added that the Kiess comet is northeast of Cliegis and has a tail of a degree and a half, which does not show through the lens of the powerful telescope, but is discernible on the photograph plates.

While the astronomers were busy looking for the new comet at Williams Bay, residents of Irving Park were startled by what they declare was a comet a third as big as the moon that visited that section of the city last evening.

"It was a bright white light, and I saw it, and so did my family and neighbours," said Bernard Kortas, 4236 North Central Park avenue, last night.

"You don't need any telescope to see this comet," he added. "It was about a third as big as the moon and shone with a brilliant white light. It seemed to have a luminous tail, too. It was directly west of my place. I watched it for 40 minutes.

THE NEW COMET HEADED THIS WAY IS A PUZZLE

Chicago, July 26.—Another wandering stranger has been discovered in the heavens and astronomers at the big Yerkes observatory at Williams Bay, Wis., and also at observatories in other parts of the world are trying to find out which way the stranger is headed and from whence it came.

The stranger, tailed and headlighted, is known as the Kiess comet, and was discovered on its long journey through the heavens July 7 by observers at the Lick observatory, on the summit of Mount Hamilton, near San Jose, Cal. News was flashed at once to Director Edwin B. Frost at the Yerkes observatory and Professor Sherburne W. Burnham got on the trail of the stranger early the following morning.

"Is this comet going to hit the earth? Where is it going and how did it get where it is?" These are the main questions now.

"We are viewing the comet every morning. It rises about 1.30 a. m.," said Director Frost over the telephone from Williams Bay last night. "This comet is of no public interest yet. We don't know yet what its orbit is. Therefore we cannot compute its distance from the earth or where it is headed for. As soon as the orbit is computed we will be able to figure those things out. Nowhere in this world yet has the orbit of this stranger been computed. It doubtless will be soon."

Did Not Notify The Council He Was Giving Up The Sewer Contract

In an interview with the Examiner this morning Mr. Jas. Bogue stated that he had not notified the Council that he was throwing up his contract in connection with the sewer system in the south end of the city.

"Neither I nor Mr. Conroy," remarked Mr. Bogue, "told the Council that I was giving up the job, nor was the work ever stopped. The only part of the contract work that was stopped was the pipe-laying, and this was suspended to allow the engineer Mr. Chipman, to come here and see the conditions, at the request of his own representative. We stopped the work in order to give the Engineer a chance to make any changes he saw fit. Moreover, the engineer, by installing the machinery in the pumping station, before we were through with it, made it difficult for the contractors."

"You intend to complete the contract?" queried the Examiner man.

"Yes, if it proves feasible," replied Mr. Bogue.

Queen Mary's Letter Of Thanks To The Marys Of Dominion Of Canada

TORONTO, JULY 26.—Mrs. J. M. Gibson, wife of the Lieutenant-Governor, has received a letter from Countess Grey transmitting a copy of the letter of Queen Mary expressing her thanks to the Marys of the Empire for their Coronation gift.

"Dear Mrs. Gibson.

"A letter from Queen Mary thanking the Marys of the Empire for the beautiful gift that they have presented to Her Majesty on her coronation, has been communicated to the English press.

"I enclose a copy of it, and would suggest that if Her Majesty's letter has not yet appeared in your provincial newspapers, they should be asked to allow their columns to be made the medium of the gracious thanks of Queen Mary to the Marys of the Empire. Believe me, Dear Mrs. Gibson, yours sincerely.

"(Signed) Alice Grey.

"Mrs. Gibson, Government House, Toronto."

Queen Mary's Letter.

The Queen wrote as follows from Buckingham Palace:

"I thank most warmly all the Marys in the Empire who have so generously contributed to the gift which has been presented to me.

"The thought of the affectionate impulse which prompted it, has, I can assure you, deeply touched me.

"The beautiful insignia of the Garter, and the pictures of the King and my son which well form the personal part of the gift, will be treasured by me throughout my life, and will be handed down as precious heirlooms to those who come after.

"I look forward with special satisfaction to devoting the remainder of this noble present to a charitable object in which I am greatly interested.

"(Signed. Mary."

Places A Limit On Visits Of Mother-In-Law

New York, July 26.—Magistrate McGuire in the Flatbush court yesterday fixed ten days as the limit for visits for mothers-in-law. The case in point was that in which young Mrs. May Coyle had summoned her mother-in-law, also Mrs. May Coyle, a resident of Boston, to court on a charge of disturbing her domestic peace and happiness.

Harry Coyle, son of Mrs. May Coyle, of Boston, sat back in the rear of the court room and never opened his mouth. His pretty young wife did all the talking and painted her mother-in-law as a "kill joy" and a "cantankerous."

"She came down from Boston ten days ago," said the younger Mrs. Cole, "and took charge of everything. Every time I opened my mouth she squelched me. I didn't know how to cook; I didn't know how to wash the baby; I didn't know how to do this, that, or the other thing. She broke all our rules and made new ones; she told us how they did things in Boston, and that that was the only right way. Finally she turned my husband against me, and I had to take myself and my baby home to mother. I telephoned her to go home, but she refused."

MOTHER-IN-LAW ON STAND

Mother-in-law Coyle said her daughter-in-law was exaggerating.

"How long have you been here?" asked Magistrate McGuire.

"Ten days," replied Mrs. Coyle, sen.

"Ten days is long enough for any mother-in-law to hold possession," replied the court. "Ten days should be the limit for all mothers-in-law. While mothers-in-law are more or less a necessary institution it is possible for them to become an evil through failure to use discretion. Mothers-in-law are constitutionally 'bossy.' There are exceptions, I admit; but they are few. It seems to be their exquisite function to domineer and tread upon the feelings of their daughters-in-law. They seem to forget that they once were daughters-in-law and had mothers-in-law inflicted upon them.

URGES USE OF LETTERS

"Mothers-in-law would be far better appreciated if they would shorten their visits and confine most of their intercourse with their sons' and daughters' families to postal cards and note paper."

"I will use telegraph blanks hereafter," said Mrs. Coyle, sen.

"Good," said the court, "and I would advise you to take the first train home to Boston if you have any regard for your son's future happiness."

"I will take the next and fastest train home," said Mrs. Coyle acidly. "I have a fine home in Boston, which is the finest city in the world. It is the home of culture and refinement."

His honor bowed to Mrs. Coyle, sen. Mrs. Coyle, sen., ignored the bow, swung around on her heel, and marched quickly out of court. Mrs. Coyle, jun., thanked the judge, smiled happily, and hurried to the side of her young husband, who had been perspiring freely and looked as if he were haunted by some secret sorrow.

Points Leading Up To The European Crisis

Following are the points leading to the European crisis in the Moroccan situation, which is a battle of commercial interests of four nations — France, Germany, Spain, England.

Spain owns a narrow, fringe along the Moroccan coast. France, nominally, is mistress of all the territory east and south of Morocco. The keenest rivalry exists in extending their respective "spheres of influence."

1903—France loaned the Sultan 7,500,000 francs.

1904—French Government arranges for a French syndicate to make a big loan to Morocco. Spain and France signed the agreement not to extend the "spheres of influence."

1905—Sultan rejected the French demand for permission to establish more military posts, and for French officers to command the Sultan's troops.

1905 — Germany demand that the "open door" be maintained in Morocco. Germany extended her commercial influence, and offered a big loan. This was resented by Spain and France. The crisis was very acute then, and the Algerciras convention of the powers was called. Emperor William strung an armyalong the Rhine, presumably engaged in manoeuvres. Insisted upon the German attitude, and forced retirement of M. Delcasse, the French Foreign Minister. The agreement was signed.

1911—Spain and France extend their military lines. The Moors resent the aggression and the tribes revolt. Germany sends the gunboat Panther to Agadir to "protect her interests." France resents. England backs up France

POST CARD COLUMN

Editor Examiner:

Sir.—That article in your paper on Wednesday evening savoured of good, common sense in regard to how we should be taxed.

In my house, built two years ago, I put a furnace last fall. Before that I had a coal stove. I also put a cement floor in my cellar and there were some other odd bits of improvements made about the house.

The assessor came along some weeks ago and says he, "I shall have to raise your assessment! You have made some improvements since a year ago when I was around last." "Yes," I says to him, "I have put in a furnace and a cement floor in my cellar and perhaps I have put in those cement walks since you were here." "Well," says the assessor, "I shall have to raise you about $400." In the end he only raised me $150.

Now, Mr. Editor, do you think that it is fair to have raised me at all? Alongside of me are two vacant lots, either of them worth more than the lot on which my house is built, because they are better located, and one of them is a corner lot. Both of these lots are unsightly with weeds and rubbish and are a nuisance to the locality, and are an eyesore in the city. By building my house and by improving my house I have added value directly to these vacant lots, yet I have to bear the taxes.

If this new system that is talked of as being such a fine thing in Vancouver and Edmonton will encourage a man to go ahead and improve his property, surely that is what we want in Peterborough. Those who profit from the income in the value of the land—from vacant lots—should pay for it in taxes. We want houses, more houses and lots of prosperous people in this city—not vacant lots and people who are afraid to improve their places because they will be taxed—"fined" most unjustly—because they have spent their money in improving the city for the common good.

I hope others will speak up on this question as it has affected them and that something may be done to set matters right and lead on to a more prosperous Peterborough."

TWO MEN KILLED

Electric Express Running Forty Miles an Hour Crashes Into Two Automobiles

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT

NEW YORK, JULY 26.—In automobile accidents in and near the city yesterday two persons, one a noted veterinary surgeon, were killed, and four others, one a daughter-in-law of erswhile Mayor Gilroy, were injured.

Running at a speed of forty miles an hour, a three-car electric express train on the Long Island Railroad crashed into two automobiles at the Thompson avenue crossing, Winfield, L.I., killing the driver of one of the cars and seriosly injuring the chauffeur and two women in the second car. The other accident, in which the surgeon was killed, was in Pelham Parkway and was due to slippery roads.

The Dead.

The Injured.

Gilroy, Mrs. John J., daughter-in-law of Thomas F. Gilroy, one time Mayor of New York. Taken to St. John's Hospital and later removed to Hotel Plaza.

Goddard, Mrs. Charles H., of Whitestone, L.I. Taken to St. John's Hospital, and then with Mrs. Gilroy to the Plaza.

Wasler, Charles, thirty-five years old, chauffeur of Eighth street, White stone; to St. John's Hospital.

Sherwood, Mrs. Thomas G., of No. 107 West Thirty-seventh street. Suffers from bruises and cuts.

Mrs. Gilroy left her apartments at the Hotel Plaza early in the morning for Whitestone. She went to the home of Mrs. Goddord, whose husband is secretary and general manager of the American Druggist' Syndicate. Then the two started back in a covered tonneau for Manhattan.

As Mrs. Goddard's car approached the Thompson avenue crossing there w ereseveral machines directly ahead In one of these, a high power De Dietrich, owned by Willis S. McCormick, a member of the banking house of McCormike Bros., of No. 71. Broadway, was Horn. Mrs. Goddard's chauffeur saw that the gates wer upa nd drove his machine alongside the McCormick car, going to the right. To the left of the McCormick car at the time was another automobile with its driver and five women.

Almost abreast of each other the three cars started across the two express and two local tracks. Walley, the flag man, was in his shanty at the south side of the tracks, having raised the gates seven minutes before, after an eastbound freight train had passed. On the east side of Thompson avenue there is a sharp curve, which prevents drivers coming from the north from having an unobstructed view of the tracks, and at the same time it does not give the motorman of a train a clear view ahead.

Harry Lefferts, the motorman, did not see the three automobiles until his train was a fe wyards from the crossing. Then he jammed on the brakes and whistled. He saw the car with the five women shoot ahead, and escape destruction by a few inches.

The train struck Horn's machine squarely in the centre, and as the automobile was pushed along the tracks it ripped up the covering of the third rail and caused a short circuit of the electric current. The train shoved the car along the rails for two hundred yards before the motorman brought it to a halt. Horn's body, with every bone broken, was lying between the rails half way between the crossing and the point at which hte train was stopped.

Mrs. Gilroy and Mrs. Goddard escaped death by a hair's breadth. The chauffeur saw the train in time to apply the brakes, bringing the car to a stop with the front wheels between the rails. The automobile spun completely around, bounded over to the side of the rails and burst into flames.

Ms. Gilroy was thrown out of the car. Mrs. Goddardwas pinned in the wreckage and badly burned before Wasler, the chauffeur, and Daniel Noble, Surrogate of Queen's county, assisted by others, dragged her from the blazing car. Then Mr. Noble took the two women in his car and hurried to St. John's Hospital, Long Island, City.

TRAGIC DEATH

Particulars of the Accident to William R. Spence, Former Well Known Resident of Mt. Julian

WAS VERY POPULAR

MOUNT JULIAN, JULY 24.—A particularly sad death occurred on Tuesday last, which has cast a gloom over this community, when William R. Spence was instantly killed in Toronto by a live wire.

Mr. Spence was a teacher by profession, but went to Toronto in the spring and started to work for the Bell Telephone Company. On Tuesday last he was stringing a cable, unspended in a sling attached to a wire above him and was being pulled along from point to point by a fellow workman, when by some means the wire sagged, coming in contact with an electric light wire, which immediately fused, the ends flying apart. Mr. Spence threw out his left hand to guard himself, but being fastened in the sling, he was helpless and unable to avoid touching the wire. It seemed to cling to him and he immediately doubled up. It was some time before the body could be lowered to the ground, and then water had to be thrown over the still smoking clothes.

An inquest was held on Wednesday evening in the morgue and on Thursday the body was conveyed to his wife's home at Mount Julian.

The late Mr. Spence was 35 years of age. He was born and educated at Norwood. He came to Burleigh in January, 1902, to teach, and was very successful in his work. He taught here three successive years and then went to the Apsley school. He was married to Miss Lily Reid, daughter of Mr. L. Reid, eight years ago. He was a member of the I. O. F. and a Conservative in politics, but took no active part. His was an enterprising, straightforward and useful life. He was well known and highly respected and his death will be much regretted.

Besides his sorrowing widow, and two small children, he leaves a father, two brothers and three sisters to mourn his loss. The bereaved friends have the entire sympathy of the whole community.

The funeral which was largely attended, took place on Friday morning from his father-in-law's home to Warsaw cemetery. The pallbearers were his five brothers-in-law and one cousin. Service was held at the house and at the grave by Mr. Mutton, student in charge of the Apsley circuit.

"Leaves have their time to fall,
And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath,
Thou hast all season's for thine own,
And stars to set; but all,
oh, death!"

DEATH OF FORMER PETERBORO' RESIDENT

BENJAMIN WALKER.

(Perth Expositor)

Sprightly, healthy and in the full bloom of his manhood a week ago, Benjamin Walker, of the firm of Wilson & Walker, boot and shoe dealers and gents' furnishers, in Perth, is to-day cold in death, his spirit having taken its flight to the great beyond on Tuesday, shortly after noon. This young man was not feeling well on Friday last, but thought little of it, so little that he did not consult a physician until the following day, when he learned of the seriousness of his case. He was suffering from inflammation of the bowels, and this gradually became intensified until Monday, when peritonitis, in a marked degree, showed itself, and from that time the young man began sinking, at no time any hope of recovery being held out to his relatives. None but those who have sat in the shadow of a great bereavement can justly weigh such a sorrow as this. Those who have gone into the valley of suffering and stood by the bedside of a loved one as hope after hope dropped away as the petals fall away from the fading flower, know that such anguish cannot find solace in the tenderest words. He who has gone forth could not be supported on the solitary path by an earthly friend, and yet sympathy, genuine heartfelt sympathy, has been and is being extended to the surviving relatives, while many silent prayers were devoutly offered to the Great Architect of the Universe. It was a sudden call. Here was a young man, sober, industrious, and anxious to make a name for himself and firm in Perth, bright prospects before him and every indication for a long life of usefulness on this transitory sphere, cut off with only a few hours' warning. He was about all that could be said of a young man, and was easily ranked among Perth's popular young people. "Benny" was known and respected by every person, and his untimely death has cast a gloom over the whole town. Deceased was a member of the Canadian Order of Foresters in Perth, in which organization he carried $1,000 insurance, and he was also identified with Fraternity Lodge of Oddfellows in Perth. The funeral will be held on Thursday at four o'clock and will be conducted by the Canadian Foresters.

Deceased was well known here, having been an employee of Robert Neil, the shoe merchant, until recently.

ARE FIXING PRICE ON MR. HATTON'S PROPERTY

His Honour Judge Huycke, Mr. Wm. Langford and Mr. Jos. McClelland are busily engaged to-day taking evidence as to the value of the property practically expropriated, belonging to Mr. George Hatton, barrister. Various opinions are being expressed as to its value. When the committee appointed by the Minister of Public Works have come to a conclusion they will recommend to the government a price to be considered by the Government for the land in question. Mr. Hatton, for purposes of a dock, asks a large figure for the property. Should the land be purchased the erection of a dock to cost in the neighbourhood of $75,000 will be commenced by the Department of Railways and Canals. Mr. Stratton has had this matter in hand for a couple of years, but as no price could be agreed on by Mr. Hatton and the government, Mr. Stratton advised arbitration proceedings as to value.

The committee will report to the government when they consider a fair price, and it is expected the work will be commenced at a very early date.

FLOURISHED REVOLVER

A man named Silas Nicholls was arrested at Bobcaygeon yesterday on a charge of flourishing a revolver in the face of another man of that place. He was arraigned before Magistrate Edmison but pleaded not guilty, and was remanded until next Tuesday, when he will again appear.

The two wage disputes were brought up before Magistrate Edmison this afternoon at 3 o'clock, the result of which will appear in to-morrow's issue.

Magistrate Edmison will go to Norwood to-morrow to try the case of a man who is charged with peddling without a licence.

Extremists Hold a Meeting at Big Banquet in London—Only One Issue Divides the Party

DINNER TO HALSBURY

London, July 27.—The banner of revolt against the party leaders was raised last night at a dinner given in honor of the Earl of Halsbury, which the extremists among the Unionists intended should be a demonstration of their strength. Several hundred Unionist peers, members of the House of Commons and party workers filled the largest dining hall in London and cheered the policy of resistance.

The Earl of Selborne, who is credited with being a candidate for Lord Lansdowne's place as leader of the Opposition in the House of Lords, presided, and conspicuous among the diners were the Duke of Bedford, the Duke of Northumberland, the Duke of Westminster, Baron Ampthill, Lord Hugh Cecil, Austen Chamberlain, Fred. E. Smith, M.P. for the Waltham division of Liverpool, and the Rt. Hon. George Wyndham, who was Chief Secretary for Ireland in 1900-05, with a seat in the Cabinet in Mr. Balfour's Ministry, 1903.

The younger Unionists and tariff reformers composed the bulk of the company. A letter from Rt. Hon. Joseph Chamberlain was read, in which he said, "I heartily support the object of the meeting. The country owes a great debt to Lord Halsbury, since in this crisis of its history he has refused to surrender his principles."

The Earl of Selborne said that the House of Lords were trustees to the people for their powers and rights under the constitution. He concluded amid cheers, "In this crisis each peer has an individual constitutional responsibility, which is above all party ties. If his conception of his duty differs from that of his leaders, he must obey his own, not theirs. Our duty is to stand by the amendments unless and until we are outvoted.

"The division in our party," continued Lord Selborne, "is on the single issue of the creation of peers. When that issue is past the party will close its ranks and fight for the restoration of the constitution and repeal the Parliament act."

Lord Halsbury was given a great ovation. He spoke with his customary vigor. He said that Lord Lansdowne had declared in the House of Lords that if the bill passed no institution, nor the crown, nor the union, nor the church, nor political liberties would be safe.

"If that is the effect, and I solemnly believe it will be, are we justified in standing aside when we might vote against the bill?" asked the speaker. "Ought we to evade the responsibility? If it is right to do it, we ought to vote for the bill. If it is not right, we ought to do the most in our power to resist it. If one of the authors of this outrage on the constitution were to be impeached, and the impeachment was properly presented, what could be said of those who, knowing what was to be done, did not vote against it?"

Austen Chamberlain made a stirring speech. When he had finished there were cries of "the future Prime Minister." A hard reference to Premier Asquith was greeted with shouts of "traitor."

Mr. Chamberlain said it was unthinkable that a great historic assembly like the House of Lords, with its fine traditions behind it, should acquiesce in the surrender of its constitutional rights and national duty.

Mr. Wyndham, the Duke of Northumberland, the Marquis of Salisbury, Lord Milner, Sir Edward Carson, Mr. Smith and Lord Hugh Cecil spoke. All referred to the leaders in friendly terms, but insisted that the question of voting was one for individual consciences.

The final solution of the political crisis is uncertain, but it may now safely be assumed that Balfour and Lansdowne will remain in the saddle as leaders of the Unionist party.

Mr. Balfour, at one of the most serious crises in his career, has again proved himself to be an astute party leader. No sooner was his letter affirming his intention to stand or fall by Lord Lansdowne published than the insipient mutiny collapsed. The organizers of the Halsbury banquet tumbled over each other in their hasty repudiation of disloyalty to Mr. Balfour. A list of more than 230 peers is published this morning who, by letter, declared themselves to be supporters of Lord Lansdowne's policy, and that they will allow the Parliament bill to pass under protest.

The exact number of peers adhering to the Earl of Halsbury is not known, but it is believed that the number will not exceed 130. As, however, Lord Lansdowne's present intention is merely to abstain, and not to vote for the bill when it is returned to the House of Lords, the insurgents could still defeat the bill unless the Government decides upon the creation of sufficient peers, or, Lord Lansdowne decides to vote for the bill—a course which is considered exceedingly improbable.

Several days are likely to elapse before the results of the numerous conferences the political leaders have had with the King and each other are seen, and it is probable that the Government will be obliged further to postpone consideration of the Parliament bill in the House of Commons beyond that.

Great enthusiasm was displayed at the Halsbury banquet last night, but all the speakers emphasized the view that they could exercise individual judgment without necessarily causing a breach in the party or implying disloyalty to the leaders.

Orgy of Ruffianism.

Northampton, England, July 27.—Augustine Birrell, Chief Secretary for Ireland, making reference here last night to the recent crying down of Premier Asquith in the House of Commons, said: "The language hurled at the Premier's head in the House of Commons would have disgraced a gambling hell or a thieves' kitchen. It was a cold-blooded, as well as an organized orgy of stupidity and ruffianism."

Stays In Asylum Awhile.

Montreal, July 27.—Alma Yecera, now Mrs. George Osborne Hayne, has dropped the action to release Justin B. McDougall from Benoit, St. Joseph Asylum, and the case was dismissed with costs. The young people have decided to bow to the father's will. McDougall will stay in the asylum for the time being, but may leave any day. They met at the court yesterday.

"We will soon get married," she said to Justin, "won't we, dear?"

"Yes, as soon as you get your divorce I will marry you, and we will be very happy," was the reply.

"We will go to Vienna," she went on, "and there we will move among counts and barons and dukes. It will be lovely."

France and Spain Anxious to Avoid War and Prevent Repetition and Incidents Such as One at Alcazar

MODUS VIVENDI

Madrid, July 27.—The main lines of a Franco-Spanish modus vivendi to prevent a repetition of incidents such as have occurred recently at Alcazar, Morocco, have been drawn up. It is expected that the agreement will be signed before the end of the week.

Paris, July 27.—A closer understanding between France and Spain appears probability, both countries being anxious to avoid difficulties growing out of clashes between the respective authorities in Northern Morocco. Definite arrangements are likely to be published within seven days.

Le Temps, pointing out that the Germans seem to be astonished at the clearness and vivacity of French public opinion, remarks that, as usual, the Germans are incapable of understanding that their proceedings are offensive to France and directly harmful to the end they seek.

"Germany thought that the despatch of a warship to Agadir was all that was necessary to bring about the arrangement they had in mind," says Le Temps. "By a singular error they are finding they have spoiled everything.

The Journal Des Debates considers the existing tension inevitable, and says that it need cause no surprise. When the opposing points of view have been made to stand out clearly, the solution will be easier.

"Germany asks as compensation," says the paper, "territory about equal to the whole of Morocco. If she makes a more reasonable claim France will be ready to listen."

Berlin, July 27.—The tone of the newspapers in discussing the Moroccan question is much calmer this morning. The Local Anzieger, however, says: "Germany is not inclined to permit such wanton and frivolous intervention as is preached in the English press," and warns meddlesome disturbers to keep their hands off.

Not Very Sanguine.

Woodstock, Ont., July 27.—John A. Almas of Folden's Corners, one of the family said to be heirs to a huge estate left by the late Col. Baker, is not optimistic over his chances of inheriting a fortune. Questioned regarding his prospects by a correspondent Mr. Almas said that he had no doubt that the estate was left and that he and his relatives were rightful heirs, but that he had great doubts whether sufficient proof would ever be brought forth to secure them the property after the lapse of so many years. This estate consists mainly of property in Philadelphia, and its value is estimated all the way from eighty million to three hundred million dollars. Mr. Almas says he will be glad to get anything that he can from it, but he will sell his chances at a very reasonable figure.

Taken to Hospital.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., July 27.—Mrs. Neopolitana, recently committed for life imprisonment for the murder of her husband, was removed to the hospital here at midnight, for the delivery of her child, after which she will be taken to Kingston penitentiary.

A Growing City.

Chatham, Ont., July 27.—The census will show that Chatham's population has reached 10,760. This is an increase of 1,600 since the last census.

Says It's All a Mistake.

Kingston, July 27.—Walter Mitchell, a convict, applied to the American consul here as an American citizen to straighten out his identity. He claims he is denied clemency because he is mistaken for another man. His case had been previously looked into and his claims were found to be unfounded. Mitchell will likely be deported when he is released, and it is said he fears arrest on reaching the other side.

ASSAILS PUGSLEY

S. O. Crockett Brings Up the Dredging Contract Again—Opposition Leader Loses His Temper

SOME PERSONALITIES

Ottawa, July 27.—Discipline and dignity are rapidly becoming lost to the Opposition. The party turned up for its first morning session yesterday in bad temper, and lost little time in displaying it. The Conservative leader and the Opposition chief whip were the trouble-makers in an attack on Hon. Mr. Pugsley, Minister of Public Works, and the House witnessed the unusual spectacle of Mr. Borden utterly losing control of himself. The Opposition leader was white with passion when, after his unprovoked insinuations, the Liberal members called insistently for a retraction and an apology.

Mr. Crockett (York, N.B.) also assailed Dr. Pugsley by moving a vote of censure for "waste of money" on the Gaspereau dredging contract at a cost of $38,000. The debate lasted all afternoon and evening, and when division was taken was voted down by a large majority.

Hon. R. Rogerson defended Dr. Pugsley vigorously.

Other speakers were Dr. Reid (Grenville); Samuel Barker (Hamilton), and Arthur Meighen (Portage la Prairie).

Arthur Gilbert (Drummond and Arthabaska) voted with the Opposition, amid Liberal cheers and taunts of "you can have him. He won't be here long." Sir Wilfrid Laurier, for the first time in many session, did not vote. Mr. Crockett received an ovation from the Conservatives when he registered his vote, Mr. Pugsley was loudly cheered by the Liberals when he rose, and until the noise subsided cast ominious glances opposition-wards.

In making his reply, Hon. Dr. Pugsley said he had never heard so many base insinuations and charges in his long public career. They did not worry him very much. It was a habit of men of small minds to seek to tear down the reputations of those held in higher esteem than they, and more successful in life.

"As I walk down the street," he added, "I do not think it desirable to turn at every cur that barks at my heels." His answer was that the dredging company, so far from having a soft job, had lost money on that part of the work that they had done, and threw up the contract as unprofitable. The money which was paid them for the work done had been certified as reasonable by the chief engineer of this department and other engineers.

Samuel Barker (Hamilton) said that, under the circumstances disclosed by the evidence before the public accounts committee, a fair inference would be that the Minister of Public Works said to Mr. Moore, one of the contractors, "Bring in your tender, and whatever it is it will be accepted. No other tender was received, and before the expiration of the advertised date the Maritime Dredging Co. was at work. "There was no formal contract other than the word of the Minister," said Mr. Barker.

Motorboat Missing.

New York, July 27.—No word has been received regarding the whereabouts of the motorboat Snapshot III., at the National Yacht Club, from whose wharf in Gravesend Bay the boat departed last Saturday with three other contestants in the Reciprocity race to Halifax.

The Snapshot III. was owned and sailed by J. B. Lindemann of this city, a wealthy dealer in optical goods. With him were his wife, who was the only woman aboard any of the racers, and a crew of three.

Two Arbitration Treaties.

Washington, July 27.—It is believed here that both the Anglo-American and Franco-American general arbitration treaties can be made ready for signature by Saturday or Monday.

A few technical adjustments remain to be made in the text of the French treaty and these are now being wrought out at the State Department, which is in constant cable communication with Paris.

Peace Celebration of 1915.

Niagara Falls, Ont., July 27.—Arrangements were made yesterday for meeting delegates from the twin-Niagaras, Toronto, Hamilton, Buffalo, New York, St. Catharines and other places here Friday to discuss plans for the hundred-year peace celebration in 1915. It is likely that a site will be selected for the proposed memorial bridge across the Niagara River.

Young Heroes.

Niagara Falls, Ont., July 27.—Gratification is felt here over the announcement that Scout George Scott of this city, and Scout Victor Graham of Tillsonburg, have been nominated for the silver heroism medal for rescuing George Baxter from drowning in the Welland River on Victoria Day.

Electrocuted.

Niagara Falls, Ont., July 27.—The body of Peter McKinnon, 40 years old, was last night brought here for burial in the family plot in Fairview Cemetery to-morrow. McKinnon was electrocuted in the Lockport cold storage plant. He was a life-long resident of this city.

Victimized American Consul.

Kingston, July 27.—U. S. Consul Johnson has been victimized by a fellow-countryman, a commercial traveler who borrowed money until his check arrived. Both man and check are missing. The same man got money from a merchant to pay freight charges, but he has not turned up since.

LINDSAY PRINTERS PLAY HERE ON SATURDAY

The return game between the Lindsay printers and the Peterborough printers will take place Saturday at the Oval. A hot game is expected, as the Peterboorough printers intend to make the Lindsay typos go the limit to win. They will have Swanston and Taylor as the battery, and it looks like a hard game. Henley, Nesbitt and Higginbotham will be the battery for Lindsay and judging by the way Higginbotham is coming along, the Peterborough printers expect a little trouble, but they claim when the game is over Lindsay will not have a 13 to 6 score in their favour. The Lindsay typos are running an excursion by special train and a big crowd is expected to accompany them.

PRINTERS WANTED OUT TO PRACTICE

The Printers baseball team are requested to be at the Oval to-night at 6.30 for practice in view of the game with Lindsay on Saturday. Those who are not out to practice and don't catch a place on the team will have no kick coming.

Found Bones of Child.

St. Catharines, July 27.—Residents of the northern portion of the city were thrown into very great excitement yesterday afternoon by the finding of the skeleton of a child, apparently two or three years old, in a lot on Wiley street, on which work had been started for the erection of a new house. No one can remember a dwelling ever having been on the lot, and, as remains were found close to the present sidewalk, it is thought the child must have been buried a considerable length of time.

Score Burned by Lightning.

Monticello, N.Y., July 27.—Twenty New Yorkers, at a large boarding house here, were injured yesterday, when the house, which is run by Charles Gereisky, was struck by a bolt of lightning. One woman, Sarah Grabner, will probably die.

The bolt entered the house at the roof, passed through several rooms, and went out through the hall, where they sat. The freakish part of the accident was that every one of the twenty was burned on the top of the head.

Fisher Not Disloyal.

London, July 27.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Premier Murray, speaking at a dinner last night, said his opinion of Andrew Fisher's remarks had been misunderstood by his interviewer. He had no brief for Fisher, but knew that statesman too well to credit him with the slightest disloyalty to the Mother Country in the matter of treaties. Fisher must be judged, he says, by his public utterances in England, in which not a breath of anything could be turned into disloyalty.

Ottawa Candidates.

Ottawa, July 27.—The approach of a general election is arousing a great interest as to who will be in the field locally. There is little doubt that H. B. McGiverin will again be the candidate of the English-speaking Liberals. For the French Liberal candidature, however, A. A. Allard, M.P., will probably have opposition. Dr. Oberries, Oscar Forest and Alderman Finard are known to be out for the honor. Among the candidates mentioned for the Conservative nominations are: A. E. Fripp, M.P.P.; J. A. Ellis, Thomas Birkett, ex-M.P., and P. D. Ross, for the English-speaking, and Dr. Chabot and A. A. Taillon for the French. Dr. Chabot is the man whom Sir Wilfrid Laurier defeated here in the last general election.

Chicago Peddlers' Strike.

Chicago, July 27.—Violence was renewed yesterday in the peddlers' strike. Wagons were overturned and vegetables destroyed in various parts of the city, the persons suffering being chiefly hucksters who had declined to quit, attempting to make sales while the strike was on.

The peddlers are seeking to compel the repeal of an ordinance which prohibits yelling and similar noises in the street. The police responded to several calls before noon. Sam Goldberg, a peddler, was perhaps fatally injured when he was attacked by a mob of 100 men and women and struck with a hatchet on the head. Four policemen were injured in quelling this disturbance.

Ecclesiastical Changes.

Montreal, July 27.—A change in the Redemptorist Order came into effect yesterday whereby the order in Canada, which had been a vice-province of Belgium, was raised to the dignity of a province of Canada. The provincial is Father Lemieux of Beaupre.

The change means the taking over of three houses formerly under American jurisdiction — those at Toronto, Quebec and St. John, N.B., and their union in one province with six Canadian houses, Montreal, Beaupre, Ottawa, Brandon, Hochelaga, and Yorkton.

May Elect Canadian.

Chatham, Ont., July 27.—Word was received here yesterday of the death of Congressman George W. Knipp of Towanda, Pa., president of the Chatham, Wallaceburg and Lake Erie Railway, in Vancouver, B.C. It is rumored that D. A. Gordon, M.P., of Wallaceburg, the present vice-president of the road, will be elected president in Mr. Knipp's place.

Leach Resting Easily.

Niagara Falls, Ont., July 27.—Bobby Leach is resting as easily as can be expected at his home last night after his sensational barrel trip over the Horseshoe Falls on Tuesday. Dr. Wilson said last night that Leach's most serious injury was the bruise on his head. The cut on the left knee is very painful. Leach will be about in several days.

Goes to Montreal.

Montreal, July 27.—At a meeting of the Montreal presbytery in Knox Presbyterian Church, the principal business dealt with was a call from Livingstone Church, Montreal, to Rev John Pate of Lancaster, Ont. In view of his acceptance arrangements were made for his induction on August 17.

A Kicking Deferred.

Aunt Clara (to her young nephew, who has just brought a bucket into the parlor where she is sitting)—Good gracious, Tommy! What are you doing with that bucket? Take it down to the kitchen at once. Tommy—I want you to kick it, Aunt Clara, 'cause I heard papa saying when you kick the bucket we'd get at the very least $5,000.

MARKET REPORTS.

Liverpool and Chicago Wheat Futures Close Higher—Live Stock—Latest Quotations.

CHICAGO, July 26.—Morocco pushed the rest of the earth off the map today so far as wheat traders were concerned. War possibilities regarding the corner of Africa opposite Gibraltar outweighed every other influence and sent prices soaring. Altho reaction ensued the close was firm. Oats varying from 1-2 lower to 3-8 to 1-2 gain and hog products dearer by 2 1-2 to 20c.

The Liverpool market closed to-day ½d to ⅝d higher than yesterday on wheat and unchanged to ⅛d lower on corn. At Antwerp wheat closed unchanged, at Berlin ⅛c higher, and at Buda Pest 1½c higher.

Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, July 26.—Owing to the unfavorable political situation abroad there was an increased demand from foreign buyers for Manitoba spring wheat. The prices had showed an advance of 1½c to 2½c per quarter, consequently sales of about 250,000 bushels were made and there were bids in the market for considerable more, but, owing to the scarcity of lake and ocean grain room for August, exporters could not accept them. There was also a better demand for oats for export account and sales of several loads were made. The local demand for American corn was good and sales of 125,000 bushels were made, prices ranging from 69½c to 69¾c per bushel, ex-store, to arrive. The export trade in spring wheat flour was more active and sales of about 20,000 sacks were reported. The local demand continues fairly good and the undertone to the market is steady. Demand for bran and shorts is heavy, and prices are firmly maintained on account of the limited offerings.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, July 26.—At the Canadian Pacific Live Stock Market this morning the offerings of live stock were 160 cattle, 65 sheep and lambs, 1625 hogs and 850 calves. Owing to the more seasonable weather and the smaller supply of cattle offered a rather firmer feeling prevailed in the market, but prices showed no change as compared with those of Monday.

The demand was better and a fairly good trade was done, but really good to choice cattle were rather scarce. Choice steers sold at 6c to 6¼c; good, at 5½c to 5¾c; fairly good, at 5c to 5¼c; fair, at 4½c to 4¾c, and common at 4c to 4½c per pound. There were a number of cows on the market, which brought from 3½c to 4¾c, and bulls, from 4c to 4c per lb. as to quality.

There was no change in the condition of the market for hogs, prices being firmly maintained under a good demand from packers, and sales of mixed lots were made at $7.25 to $7.50, and heavy weights at $6 to $6.90 per cwt., weighed of the cars.

Verdict of Accidental Death.

Chatham, Ont., July 27.—The inquest into the death of Samuel Fogler, who was crushed beneath a C.P.R. yard engine, proved that Fogler came to his death through purely accidental causes.

The Pope Better.

Rome, July 27.—The Pope was better last night, his temperature being nearly normal. The doctors, however, refused to set any date upon which he might resume his audiences.

CANCIA IN TORONTO.

Cuban Wants to Secure Reciprocity With Canada.

Toronto, July 27.—Intimate trade relations between Cuba and Canada were advocated by Geo. Carlos Garcia, the famous Cuban soldier and diplomat, who achieved great prominence in the Cuban war for independence, before the Toronto Board of Trade yesterday afternoon. Gen. Garcia declared that reciprocity between Canada and Cuba would be of considerable benefit to the tables and pockets of both countries. It would, he said, be the pleasantest kind of an agreement, because the products of both countries were of such a nature that in no way would they come into competition with each other. Also, he thought, a postal treaty between the two countries would be of much benefit.

"What I would like to emphasize to your Government is the necessity for getting into closer amicable and commercial relations with Cuba. Perhaps in the near future—five or six months—it would honor me greatly to come back to you and then public opinion might be prepared, and we could make representations to the Government at Ottawa as to the advantages that would be given to both countries by a compact," he said.

The Board of Trade, which was very well represented, applauded Gen. Garcia's sentiments, and those members who spoke after the general averred that they were in accord with him in wishing for an exchange on a satisfactory basis of the products of the two countries.

"If we could get a line of steamships plying between Cuban and Canadian ports—after the consummation of trade treaties — Canadians would be able to purchase pineapples two for five cents, grape fruit five cents apiece, tomatoes at $1.25 per crate, and other fruit at as agreeable prices, all in the depth of winter, when your lakes were frozen, your hills are in the grip of winter and your thermometers register the awful temperature of 20 below zero."

Serious Italian Affray.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., July 27.—As the result of a serious stabbing affray in vicinity of Tagone Station, Frank Dini and George Galton, Italians, are at the General Hospital, and in the case of the latter scant hope of his recovery is entertained, as his right lung is pierced, and he is continually spitting blood.

According to his story, Dini, who is less injured than Galton, called at his house on James street, at 7 o'clock Monday night and the pair went for a walk. They had not proceeded far when an altercation ensued and hard words passed between the pair. Dini states that Galton demanded money from him, but this excuse is accepted by those who know Galton best. They state he is known as an honest man.

Cutting First Oat Crop.

Morden, Man., July 27.—J. W. Shaver, a farmer, living one mile south of Morden, is busy cutting the first oat crop to be harvested here. The field, which was sown early, is well filled and should easily average 50 bushels to the acre. The crops to the south and southwest of Morden are the best ever seen in that district and the wheat fields should average 25 bushels to the acre. A hot dry wind from the south has been blowing all day, but outside of stopping haying while it continues, will not injure the grain crop, which is filling and ripening rapidly.

OBITUARY

DAVID WHITE.

Mr. David White passed away at the residence of his son, lot 8, concession 12, North Monaghan, on Thursday morning, July 27th, at 7.30 oclock. Mr. White had been ill for the past couple of weeks, suffering from the effects of an accident sustained in sliding down a mow in the barn. Mr. White was for eleven days confined in Nicholls Hospital and had apparently recovered, but after returning home suffered a relapse and passed away after an illness of three days.

The deceased, it will be remembered, was engaged in the butcher business in Peterborough for some years, afterwards retiring to the farm. Mrs. White, who was a daughter of Mr. John Fowler, predeceased her husband about seventeen years ago.

Mr. White leaves to mourn his loss three daughter and two sons, Miss Aggie of Milton, Miss Helen of North Monaghan, and Miss Annie of Lindsay, Everett of Minneapolis and William of North Monaghan. Two sisters, Mrs. Fred Stinson of North Monaghan and Mrs. A. Lillico of Chesley, also survive. In religion Mr. White was a Methodist and attended the Charlotte street Methodist church.

The funeral will take place on Saturday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock from the residence of his son, North Monaghan, to Little Lake cemetery.

Mr. White had many friends, who will share with the family their deep grief at his demise. He was sixty-one years of age and had been a resident of the township of North Monaghan for the greater part of his life.

ELIZA HENDERSON.

At the age of 62, Eliza, the wife of Mr. Robert Henderson, passed away at the family residence, 194 Clifton street, East City, last night.

Mrs. Henderson is an old resident of Peterborough, having lived in the city the major portion of her life. She was well known for her kindly and benevolent disposition which won for her a large circle of friends. Besides her sorrowing husband the deceased is survived by three brothers, Robert, George and Thomas, all of this city.

The funeral will take place at 3 o'clock to-morrow at the Little Lake cemetery, the Rev. Mr. Sawers officiating.

SOME SUGGESTIONS FOR COMFORTABLE TRAVELLING

The average woman can make the trip from coast to coast with no more baggage than a suit case, provided that she will not be more than a couple of days in any resort and does not intend doing society. It is so much easier to check your trunks straight through to some final destination or the place you intend making your head quarters for sight-seeing expeditions.

Every time you move a trunk from train to hotel it costs anywhere from 5 cents to $1, exclusive of the tip to the porter. Then sometimes you make a train in a hurry and when it is a case of one train a day only, it is not always convenient to stop and check the trunks.

Have all your clothes as simple as possible. Get a small hat with little trimming—no flowers or fussy feathers if you want it to be serviceable. A simple bow of ribbon is by far the best trimming. Be sure to have a big chiffon veil to protect your hat in case of rain and for comfort in sitting out on the observation platform. As far as your outer garments are concerned a plain tailored suit is the best thing to have, with a couple of waists to match, one plain to wear every day and the other a trifle dressy, with possibly elbow sleeves to use for dinner in hotels. Of course, dark blue or black is the neatest thing, but for practical use, a mixed tweed in either gray or brown will show the dust and dirt less.

It is rather a nuisance to carry along a raincoat or ulster, but there are many occasions when one is very comfortable.

Provide three pairs of stockings and low shoes as well as high for the changes in the climate through this country are frequently sudden. Wear a dark petticoat to match your suit and provide about three pairs of gloves, two short and one long for your short-sleeved blouse. The nicest waists for travelling are made of China silk. A long, dark kimona is absolutely essential. Black China silk is the nicest, but any sort of inconspicuous cotton crepe will answer the purpose. You cannot get along without this, as most women sleep in them and they are absolutely necessary to going to and from the dressing room, night and morning. Be sure to have a comfortable pair of low shoes to wear on the train, winter or summer. Take your usual toilet articles in a rubber-lined case made with pockets. Provide plenty of hair and safety pins, a spool of thread and needles and a pair of scissors.

Have plenty of handkerchiefs and several little turn-over collars to pin in the neck of your every-day waist. They make it look fresh and neat and you can launder them easily by washing them and putting them on a mirror or window to dry.

Take plenty of stamps, for there are many occasions when you will want to drop a letter fro msome way station and stamps are not always procurable.

A most important factor on a long trip is food. Even if your funds are unlimited there comes a time on nearly every trip when you long for a lunch basket. Even a box of crackers come in handy. If you are limited in your expenditures, by all means pack a lunch hamper and renew your supplies at each stopping off point. Meals on trains are exceedingly expensive and it is easy to pack a basket or box with crackers, tinned meats or sardines and fruit.

LEG BADLY LACERATED

Mr. A. C. Hawley was the victim of a painful ulaccident yesterday. He was endeavouring to hold a spirited horse, when it became unmanageable and crowded him up against a barbed wire fence. Mr. Hawleys' leg was badly lacerated above the knee, the flesh being cut to the bone. He will be confined to his home for some time.

REVOLT NOT PANNING OUT

Portuguese Royalists Have Not Begun Operations—Government is Anxious Over Reports About Frontier Movements

DEFENCE MEASURES

Lisbon, July 29.—The monarchist invasion of Portugal from the north, to be followed by a peasant rising, which has been expected daily, has not materialized. The monarchist agents permit the information that first one day and then another has been fixed for the outbreak to fall into the hands of the Government. The provisional administration is thus kept in a state of uneasiness, and is obliged to maintain expensive measures for defence. Commercial and financial interests are kept worried, not knowing the hour when the projected counter-revolution will begin.

Lub d'Almeida, chief of the secret political secretary, known as the Carbonarios, one of the most powerful influences supporting the Government, has left Lisbon for the Galician frontier to assist in the defensive measures and to be on the field should sharp action be necessary. Numerous Carbonarios are with him, and it has been arranged that he shall have 2,000 members of the society at his call, whose daily maintenance is to be paid by the state, should events so require.

The Government actually had on the northern frontier 10,000 men. The conviction of the Cabinet appears to be that something must happen in no great while, but the Ministers are also convinced that they are wholly competent to deal with it. The Lisbon newspapers have sent correspondents to the frontier, in anticipation of fighting.

The monarchists say that they have upward of 10,000 men ready to invade Portugal, but these figures are reduced by other and more reliable information to between 3,000 and 4,000 adherents, who are under pay and under arms. The privates are reported to receive a small sum per day for the purpose of boarding themselves at the farms in the villages throughout Galicia.

Met Death In Tank.

Woodstock, Ont., July 28.—Miss Marie Hockey, daughter of the Methodist minister at Waterloo and the delegate to the missionary conference at Woodstock College, met death in the swimming tank of the college yesterday afternoon. Miss Hockey, who is 18 years of age, had been playing tennis all afternoon, went in with a number of other girls for a swim. She fainted in the water and when the other girls went to her rescue and succeeded in hauling her out she was dead. A doctor, who was summoned, found no water in her lungs, and it is presumed that the cause of her death was heart failure.

Recovery From Drop.

Niagara Falls, Ont., July 28.—For the first time since his barrel trip over the Horseshoe Falls Tuesday, Bobby Leach was out of bed yesterday afternoon. He went for a short drive with Harry Williams. Mrs. Leach and little Pearl Leach.

BRITAIN WILL STAND NO INTERFERENCE IS ANNOUNCEMENT OF PREMIER ASQUITH

In Declaration in House of Commons Prime Minister Has the Support of the Opposition.

SITUATION IS GRAVE

London, July 28.—The most pessimistic views regarding the acuteness of the Moroccan crisis were largely confirmed by the Prime Minister in the House of Commons yesterday, when with a manner as impressive as his words, he read from a manuscript, which had been carefully prepared, a warning to Germany that Great Britain proposed to stand for what she considered her rights, and to maintain the balance of power in Europe.

Further testimony as to the gravity of the situation is given by the fact that the Prime Minister obviously had taken the leader of the Opposition into the Government's confidence, and Mr. Balfour's declaration was no less firm than Mr. Asquith's.

The Prime Minister's statement was couched in diplomatic, though not reassuring, language. At the very opening he said:

"It is obvious that this Moroccan question has reached a point at which it will become increasingly difficult to end, embarrassing and anxious, unless a solution is found."

Later in the statement the Prime Minister said:

"We thought it right from the beginning to make clear that, failing of a settlement such as I have indicated, we must become an active party in the discussion of the situation. That would be our right as a signatory to the treaty of Algeciras, as it might be our obligation under the terms of our agreement of 1904 with France. It might be our duty in defence of British interests directly after, by further developments."

In promising the support of the Opposition to the Government Mr. Balfour said:

"If there are any who supposed that we would be wiped off the map of Europe because we have our difficulties at home, it may be worth while saying that they bitterly mistake the temper of the British people and the patriotism of the Opposition."

Such plain speaking on a question fraught with possibilities of a great European war has not been heard in the British Parliament in many years. The outcome of the situation appears to rest almost wholly on Germany's shoulders. If, as some German papers say, Germany has reached the stake of a national development, where the necessities of her population demand that she branch out into foreign fields, and considers this a vital topic, she imposes conditions on France which Great Britain thinks threaten British vital interests, and the only result, so far as those best informed see it, will be oft-repeated and long-averted European convulsion.

German newspapers profess to think that Chancellor Lloyd-George's recent speech of warning was not addressed to Germany, but a sort of general proclamation of principles. Mr. Asquith's statement leaves no doubt, and was intended plainly to leave none, on the point. While the country has no knowledge of the extent of Germany's first conditions, the Prime Minister made it plain that they were such that Great Britain would not accept them.

Mr. Balfour strongly hinted at what is the general opinion, that Germany thought she could take advantage of the crisis in Great Britain's democratic politics, in the belief that it was so absorbing to the country that the country would pay attention to foreign affairs.

The English newspapers are entirely united in supporting the Government. They are studiously polite in language but strongly urge that Germany shall not be permitted to make any African excursion which would seriously damage Britain's national interests. All the politicians and the public earnestly hope that Germany's program is not one which Great Britain can consider impossible.

Reservists Called Home.

Sherbrooke, July 28.—Two German workmen at Thetford mines have been ordered to return to Germany to join the first reserve.

Laborite Opposes War.

London, July 28.—James R. MacDonald, leader of the Laborites, who spoke after Mr. Balfour in the Commons yesterday, remarked that the gravity of the Premier's statement, in spite of its very careful phrasing, could not elude any one. The Labor members were utterly opposed to war, but he hoped that no European nations would assume for a single moment that party divisions weaken national spirit.

Nevertheless the Laborites of Germany, France and England, would cooperate to the very last moment, he said, to seek peace and prevent two professedly Christian countries from resorting to the arbitration of the sword over a difficulty that could easily be settled at The Hague.

The ambassadors and ministers at London of Germany, France, Russia, Spain, Japan, Sweden and Belgium, were present to hear Mr. Asquith's statement, which made a profound impression.

Nothing Doing Yet.

Paris, July 28.—The Temps says that although the conversations of M. Cambon, the French ambassador to Germany, and Baron Von Kiderlen Wachter, the German Foreign Secretary, have taken on a tone of greater cordiality, they have not resulted in advancing the situation.

Lloyd's on War Risk.

London, July 28.—At Lloyd's yesterday war risks against hostilities between Great Britain and Germany within three months rose rapidly from 5 to 8 per cent. In some cases even 10 per cent. was paid. Against the risk of war between France and Germany, 12 per cent was quoted.

HE'S LONESOME NOW.

Sailorman at Brooklyn Loses Both His Wives.

New York, July 28.—Charles Hoffman, purser of a steamship, walked into Supreme Court Justice Crane's court in Brooklyn yesterday, accompanied by two wives. Half an hour later he walked out without any wife at all. He explained that he did not mean to commit bigamy, and that when he married Miss Grace L. Gillette at Stafford, Conn., five weeks ago, he was under the impression that the girl he wed in Brooklyn thirteen years before, had died in the Philippines. Her brother had told him so. Hoffman said, but Mrs. Hoffman No. 1 denied the report in person.

Justice Crane granted the second wife an annulment of her marriage and the first wife a divorce, naming the second wife as co-respondent. Hoffman appeared to be deeply in love with his second wife, and was inconsolate when she declined to re-marry him.

DISSOLUTION OF THE HOUSE IS VERY CLOSE AT HAND

Members Are Tiring of the Obstruction at Ottawa—Sir Wilfrid Has Been Closeted With Earl Grey Regarding the Moment of Calling an Election.

Ottawa, July 28.—Parliament is having a long death rattle, but yesterday's further twelve-hour rattle, provided as usual by the obstructionists, brought the final dissolution perceptibly nearer. Both patient and patience are nearly exhausted, and the last throes are now almost hourly expected. There was a persistent rumor last night that dissolution might come before the week is out. Sir Wilfrid is, however, keeping his own counsel as to the psychological moment to ask Earl Grey for the inevitable dissolution, and perhaps only the two of them know the probable hour when the agony shall be ended.

All day the air has been full of dissolution rumors. A special issue of The Gazette was shortly to appear with the Governor-General's proclamation, said one report. Sir Wilfrid was in conference with His Excellency and the duration of Parliament was only a matter of hours, said another. The latest rumor last night is that Earl Grey told Sir Wilfrid Laurier that before he could listen to any advice regarding a dissolution, Parliament had better devote itself to the task of passing supply to enable the business of the country to go on uninterrupted.

Certain it seems that supply will have to be sought by the Government before His Excellency will incline to further advice. In this connection a nice question has arisen whether dissolution could be brought about with one branch of Parliament sitting and the other adjourned.

The principal item of discussion yesterday was a motion of censure in connection with the Chinese immigration frauds at Vancouver, brought on by J. S. Taylor (New Westminster). Mr. Taylor assailed Mr. Templeman vigorously for negligence and connivance.

The report of the Imperial Conference was laid on the table of the House yesterday morning by the Prime Minister. There was also some correspondence regarding the publication of a report of the consultations between the Admiralty and the representatives of the Dominion on the subject of the status of dominion navies. The Prime Minister also tabled the text of the sealing convention.

When the House resumed after luncheon Martin Burrell (Yale-Cariboo) raised the question of holding deferred elections in parts of British Columbia.

Mr. Burrell hoped the Government would see that no more deferred elections were held in British Columbia, that it disturbed business conditions and imposed a hardship on the constituencies in which they were held. As far as his own constituency was concerned, Mr. Burrell was satisfied the election could be held there on the same day as in the remainder of the country.

Mr. Fielding replied to the question of holding deferred elections and said that "simultaneous voting is one of the good features of the Canadian constitution." He would place Mr. Burrell's recommendation before his colleagues.

Saskatoon Has Explosion.

Saskatoon, July 28.—Three men were injured, two seriously, and the city is in darkness indefinitely as the result of a boiler explosion at the city power plant early yesterday afternoon. The boiler had been leaking all morning and power shut off pending repairs, but the leak got worse, and the fires were ordered to be drawn. While being drawn a boiler tube exploded, clouds of scalding water and superheated steam immediately enveloping the whole boiler room. I. Sullivan, a coal wheeler, received the first blast, being blown over a coal pile, but luckily escaping with bruises and a scratched hand.

Immediately after came a discharge with the combined force of the three boilers, which were connected, the centre being the source of the trouble, the whole force, aggregating 450 horsepower. Andrew G. Sangster, superintendent of power; Harry Johnson, chief engineer, and Jack Kemp were the three men involved, the first and second named being badly scalded all over the body. Johnson had the flesh scalded almost off both arms and hands, and Sangster was also terribly scalded.

Toronto Youth Sent Home.

Chicago, July 28.—Edward Kemp, 20 years old, of Toronto, was befriended by Municipal Judge Fry in the Hyde Park court yesterday afternoon.

He was given his fare to Toronto, and sent home to his father. Kemp was arrested a week ago by the police of the Fifteeth street station after he had eaten a meal in the Paris restaurant, and could not pay for it. Kemp told the judge that he was hungry and sick. His story was verified and he was sent home.

Fired In the Air.

Chatham, July 28.—John Duckett came up in the Police Court yesterday morning, charged with shooting with intent to kill. The charge was laid by Dan Harris, who boarded with Duckett. The latter claims that Harris and some friends got a keg of beer and was drinking it and making such a noise that he couldn't sleep. When they would not stop at his request, he got a revolver and fired it in the air. He says when the shot was fired they all ran like mad, though he didn't shoot with any intentions of hitting anyone. The case was remanded until to-day.

Thought He Was Drunk.

Stratford, July 28.—Death came in sudden form to B. Plumb, home unknown, yesterday, when he fell dead in No. 3 train from Toronto, which arrives here at 12.13 o'clock. Little is known regarding the deceased, who was about 35 years of age, save that he boarded the train at the Union Station, Toronto, along with one A. Watkins.

Between Baden and Hamburg he rolled off the seat to the floor between two seats, but did not strike his head, sliding down easily. The conductor and brakeman thought he was intoxicated.

FOUR HOURS IN AIR.

Record For Endurance Is Won by a Canadian Aviator.

Mineola, N.Y., July 28.—St. Croix Johnstone, the Canadian aviator, broke the American endurance record for monoplanes and biplanes yesterday when he remained in the air for 4 hours, 1 minute, 53 3-4 seconds, circling the aviation course of about five miles thirty-nine times. He was compelled to alight before his fifty gallons of gasoline were consumed because of engine trouble in his Moisant monoplane.

The previous American record, made at San Francisco on Jan. 20th last, was made by Parmelee, his record being 3 hours, 30 minutes, 49 1-2 seconds.

Counting gasoline, oil and accessories, with his own weight, Johnstone carried about 900 pounds of weight in his flight, which was made at a rate close to sixty miles an hour and about 300 feet above the ground in a gentle breeze.

Johnstone now resides in Chicago.

Satisfied Customers

There is a notable increase in my business. I expect it from the class of work I am doing. I do not expect to get all the optical business in the city, any more than one shoe store could sell all the shoes, but my aim is to obtain patronage enough to keep me reasonably busy and to give such satisfaction that my optical parlors will be indelibly fixed in the minds of those who desire the best at moderate prices.

It is very gratifying to note that much of my patronage has come from parties who have been recommended to me by pleased customers. Hence I want more customers to please.

My business methods will never be of the catch penny variety, I want to give a dollar's worth for every dollar I receive, and when I know of any plan whereby I can give a better dollar's worth than I am now doing, I shall adopt that plan. My main object in writing this ad is to get you to visit me. All Work Positively Guaranteed

By JACK LONDON

And then she reached for him, across the gate, and got him. It was a sweeping, broad-handed slap, so heavy that he staggered sideways and nearly fell. He sprang for the gate, as if to force it open, while the crowd surged forward against the fence. Joan thought rapidly. Her revolver was hanging on the wall of her grass house. Yet one cry would bring her sailors, and she knew she was safe. So she did not cry for help. Instead, she whistled for Satan, at the same time calling him by name. She knew he was shut up in the living room, but the blacks did not wait to see. They fled with wild yells through the darkness, followed reluctantly by Gogoomy; while she entered the bungalow, laughing at first, but finally vexed to the verge of tears by what had taken place. She had sat up a whole night with the boy who had died, and yet his brother demanded to be paid for his life.

"Ugh!" the ungrateful beast!" she muttered, while she debated whether or not she would confess the incident to Sheldon.

CHAPTER XI.

THE PORT ADAMS CROWD

"And so it was all settled easily enough," Sheldon was saying. He was on the veranda, drinking coffee. The whaleboat was being carried into its shed. "Boucher was a bit timid at first to carry off the situation with a strong hand, but he did very well once we got started. We made a play at holding a court, and Telepasse, the old scoundrel, accepted the findings. We fined him ten times the value of the pigs, and made him move on with his mob. Oh, they're a sweet lot, I must say, at least sixty of them, in five big canoes, and out for trouble. They've got a dozen Sniders that ought to be confiscated."

"Why didn't you?" Joan asked.

"And have a row on my hands with the Commissioner? He's terribly touchy about his black wards, as he calls them. Well, we started them along their way, though they went in on the beach to kai-kai several miles back. They ought to pass here some time to-day."

Two hours later the canoes arrived. No one saw them come. The house-boys were busy in the kitchen at their own breakfast. The plantation hands were similarly occupied in their quarters. Satan lay sound asleep on his back under the billiard table, in his sleep brushing at the flies that pestered him. Joan was rummaging in the store-room, and Sheldon was taking his siesta in a hammock on the veranda. He awoke gently. In some occult, subtle way a warning that all was not well had penetrated his sleep and roused him. Without moving, he glanced down and saw the ground beneath covered with armed savages. They were the same ones he had parted with that morning, though he noted an accession in numbers. There were men he had not seen before.

He slipped from the hammock and with deliberate slowness sauntered to the railing, where he yawned sleepily and looked down on them. It came to him curiously that it was the destiny ever to stand on this high place, looking down on unending hordes of black trouble that required control, bullying and cajolery. But while he glanced carelessly over them, he was keenly taking stock. The new men were all armed with modern rifles. Ah, he had thought so. There were fifteen of them, undoubtedly the Lunga runaways. In addition, a dozen old Sniders were in the hands of the original crowd. The rest were armed with spears, clubs, bows and arrows, and long-handled tomahawks. Beyond, drawn up on the beach, he could see the big war-canoes, with high and fantastically carved bows and sterns, ornamented with scrolls and bands of white cowrie shells. These were the men who had killed his trader, Oscar, at Ugi.

"What name you walk about this place?" he demanded.

At the same time he stole a glance seaward to where the Flibberty-Gibbet reflected herself in the glassy calm of the sea. Not a soul was visible under her awnings, and he saw the whale-boat was missing from alongside. The Tahitians had evidently gone shooting fish up the Balesuna. He was all alone in his high place above this trouble, while his world slumbered peacefully under the breathless tropic noon.

Nobody replied, and he repeated his demand, more of mastery in his voice this time, and a hint of growing anger. The blacks moved uneasily, like a herd of cattle, at the sound of his voice. But not one spoke. All eyes, however, were staring at him in certitude of expectancy. Something was about to happen, and they were waiting for it, waiting with unanimous, unstable mob-mind for the one of them who would make the first action that would precipitate all of them into a common action. Sheldon looked for this one, for such was the one to fear. Directly beneath him he caught sight of the muzzle of a rifle, barely projecting between two black bodies, that was slowly elevating toward him. It was held at the hip by a man in the second row.

"What name you?" Sheldon suddenly shouted, pointing directly at the man who held the gun, who startled and lowered the muzzle.

Sheldon still held the whip hand, and he intended to keep it.

"Clear out, all you fella boys," he ordered. "Clear out and walk along salt water. Savvee!"

"Me talk," spoke up a fat and filthy savage whose hairy chest was caked with the unwashed dirt of years.

"Oh, is that you, Telepasse?" the white man queried genially. "You tell 'm boys clear out, and you stop and talk along me."

"Him good fella boy," was the reply. "Him stop along."

"Well, what do you want?" Sheldon asked, striving to hide under assumed carelessness the weakness of concession.

"That fella boy belong along me." The old chief pointed out Gogoomy, whom Sheldon recognized.

"White Mary belong you too much no good," Telepasse went on. "Bang 'm head belong Gogoomy. Gogoomy, all the same chief. Bime by me finish, Gogoomy big fella chief. White Mary bang 'm head. No good. You pay me plenty tobacco, plenty powder, plenty calico."

"You old scoundrel," was Sheldon't comment. An hour before, he had been chuckling over Joan's recital of the episode, and here, an hour later, was Telepasse himself come to collect damages.

"Gogoomy," Sheldon ordered, "what name you walk about here? You get along quarters plenty quick."

"Me stop," was the defiant answer. "White Mary t'long you bang 'm head," old Telepasse began again. "My word, plenty big fella trouble you no pay."

"You talk along boys," Sheldon said, with increased irritation. "You tell 'm get to hell along beach. Then I talk with you."

Sheldon felt a slight vibration of the veranda and knew that Joan had come out and was standing by his side. But he did not dare glance at her. There were too many rifles below there, and rifles had a way of going off from the hip.

Again the veranda vibrated with her moving weight, and he knew that Joan had gone into the house. A minute later she was back beside him. He had never seen her smoke, and it struck him as peculiar that she should be smoking now. Then he guessed the reason. With a quick glance, he noted the hand at her side, and in it the familiar, paper-wrapped dynamite. He noted, also the end of fuse, split properly, into which had been inserted the head of a wax match.

"Telepasse, you old reprobate, tell 'm boys clear out along beach. My word, I no gammon along you."

"Me no gammon," said the chief." "Me want 'm pay white Mary bang 'm head b'long Gogoomy."

"I'll come down there and bang 'm head b'long you," Sheldon replied, leaning toward the railing as if to leap over.

An angry murmur arose, and the blacks surged restlessly. The muzzles of many guns were rising from the hips. Joan was pressing the lighted end of the cigarette to the fuse. A Snider went off with the roar of a bomb-gun, and Sheldon heard a pane of window-glass crash behind him. At the same moment Joan flung the dynamite, the fuse hissing and spluttering, into the thick of the blacks. They scattered back in too great haste to do any more shooting. Satan, aroused by the one shot, was snarling and panting to be let out. Joan heard, and ran to let him out; and thereat the tragedy was averted, and the comedy began.

Rifles and spears were dropped or flung aside in a wild scramble for the protection of the cocoanut palms. Satan multiplied himself. Never had he been free to tear and rend such a quantity of black flesh before, and he bit and snapped and rushed the flying legs till the last pair were above his head. All were treed except Telepasse, who was too old and fat, and he lay prone and without movement where he had fallen; while Satan, with too great a heart to worry an enemy that did not move, dashed frantically from tree to tree, barking and springing at those who clung on lowest down.

"I fancy you need a lesson or two in inserting fuses," Sheldon remarked dryly.

Joan's eyes were scornful.

"There was no detonator on it," she said. "Besides, the detonator is yet unmanufactured that will explode that charge. It's only a bottle of chlorodyne."

She put her fingers into her mouth, and Sheldon winced as he saw her blow, like a boy, a sharp, imperious whistle—the call she always used for her sailors and that always made him wince.

"They're gone up the Balesuna, shooting fish," he explained. "But there comes Oleson with his boat's chew. He's an old war-horse when he gets started. See him banging the boys. They don't pull fast enough for him."

"And now what's to be done?" she asked. "You've treed your game, but you can't keep it treed."

"No; but I can teach them a lesson."

Sheldon walked over to the big bell.

"It is all right," he replied to her gesture of protest. "My boys are practically all bush-men, while these chaps are salt-water men, and there's no love lost between them. You watch the fun."

He rang a general call, and by the time the two hundred labourers trooped into the compound Satan was once more penned in the living room, complaining to high heaven at his abominable treatment. The plantation hands were dancing war-dances around the base of every tree and filling the air with abuse and vituperation of their hereditary enemies. The skipper of the Flibberty-Gibbet arrived in the thick of it, in the first throes of oncoming fever, staggering as he walked, and shivering so severely that he could scarcely hold the rifle he carried. His face was ghastly blue, his teeth clicked and chattered, and the violent sunshine through which he walked could not warm him.

"I'll s-s-sit down, and k-k-keep a guard on 'em," he chattered. "D-d-dash it all, I always g-get f-fever when there's any excitement. W-w-wh-what are you going to do?"

"Gather up the guns first of all."

Under Sheldon's direction the house-boys and gang-bosses collected the scattered arms and piled them in a heap on the veranda. The modern rifles, stolen from Lunga, Sheldon set aside; the Sniders he smashed into fragments; the pile of spears, clubs and tomahawks he presented to Joan.

"A really unique addition to your collection," he smiled; "picked up right on the battle-field."

Down on the beach, he built a bonfire out of the contents of the canoes, his blacks amusing, breaking and looting everything they laid hands on. The canoes themselves, splintered and broken, filled with sand and coral-boulders, were towed out to ten fathoms of water and sunk.

"Ten fathoms of water will be deep enough for them to work in," Sheldon said, as they walked back to the compound.

Here a Saturnalia had broken loose. The war-songs and dances were more unrestrained, and from abuse, the plantation blacks had turned to pelting their helpless foes with pieces of wood, handfuls of pebbles and chunks of coral-rock. And the seventy-five lusty cannibals clung stoically to their tree-perches, enduring the rain of missiles and snarling down promises of vengeance.

"There'll be wars for forty years on Malaita on account of this," Sheldon laughed. "But I fancy old Telepasse will never again attempt to rush a plantation."

"Eh, you old scoundrel," he added, turning to the old chief, who sat gibbering in impotent rage at the foot of the steps. "Now head belong you bang 'm, too. Come on, Miss Lackland, bang 'm just once. It will be the crowning indignity."

"Ugh, he's too dirty. I'd rather give him a bath. Here you, Adamu Adam, give this devil-devil a wash. Soap and water! Fill that washtub. Ornafri, run and fetch 'm scrubbrush."

The Tahitians, back from their bathing and grinning at the bedlam of the compound, entered into the joke. "Tambo! Tambo!" shrieked the cannibals from the trees, appalled at so awful a desecration, as they saw their chief tumbled into the tub and the sacred dirt rubbed and soaped from his body.

Joan, who had gone into the bungalow, tossed down a strip of white calico, in which old Telepasse was promptly wrapped, and he stood forth, resplendent and purified, withal he still spat and struggled from the soap-suds with which Noah had gargled his throat.

The house-boys were directed to fetch hand-cuffs, and, one by one, the Lunga runaways were hauled down out of their trees and made fast. Sheldon ironed them in pairs, and ran a steel chain through the links of the irons. Gogoomy was given a lecture for his mutinous conduct and locked up for the afternoon. Then Sheldon rewarded the plantation hands with an afternoon's holiday, and, when they had withdrawn from the compound, permitted the Port Adams men to descend from the trees. And all afternoon he and Joan loafed in the cool of the veranda, and watched them diving down and emptying their sunken canoes of the sand and rocks. It was twilight when they embarked and paddled away with a few broken paddles. A breeze had sprung up, and the Flibberty-Gibbet had already sailed for Lunga to return the runaways.

CHAPTER XII.

Mr. Morgan and Mr. Raff.

Sheldon was back in the plantation superintending the building of a bridge, when the schooner Malakula ran in close and dropped anchor. Joan watched the taking in of sail, and the swinging out of the boat with a sailor's interest, and herself met the two men who came ashore. While one of the house-boys ran to fetch Sheldon, she had the visitors served with whiskey and soda, and sat and talked with them.

They seemed awkward and constrained in her presence, and she caught first one and then the other looking at her with secret curiosity. She felt that they were weighing her, appraising her, and for the first time the anomalous position she occupied on Berande sank sharply home to her. On the other hand, they puzzled her. They were neither traders nor sailors of any type she had known. Nor did they talk like gentlemen, despite the fact that there was nothing offensive in their bearing and that the veneer of ordinary social nicety was theirs. Undoubtedly, they were men of affairs — businessmen of a sort; but what affairs should they have in the Solommons, and what business on Berande? The elder one, Morgan, was a huge man, bronzed and moustached, with a deep, bass voice and an almost guttural speech, and the other, Raff, was slight and effeminate, with nervous hands and watery washed-out grey eyes, who spoke with a faint indefinable accent that was hautingly reminiscent of the Cockney, and that was yet not Cockney of any brand she had ever encountered. Whatever they were, they were self-made men, she concluded; and she felt the impulse to shudder at thought of falling into their hands in a business way. There, they would be merciless.

She watched Sheldon closely when he arrived, and divined that he was not particularly delighted to see them. But see them he must, and so pressing was the need that, after a little perfunctory general conversation, he led the two men into the stuffy office. Later in the afternoon she asked Lalaperu where they had gone.

"My word" quoth Lalaperu; "plenty walk about, plenty look 'm. Look 'm tree; look 'm ground belong tree; look 'm all fella bridge; look 'm copra-house; look 'm grass land; look 'm river; look 'm whale-boat—my word, plenty big fella look 'm too much."

"What fella man them two fella?" she queried.

"Big fella marster along white man," was the extent of his description.

But Joan decided that they were men of importance in the Solomons, and that their examination of the plantation and of its accounts was of sinister significance.

At dinner no word was dropped that gave a hint of their errand. The conversation was on general topics; but Joan could not help noticing the troubled, absent expression that occasionally came into Sheldon's eyes. After coffee, she left them; and at midnight, from across the compound, she could hear the low murmur of their voices and see glowing the fiery ends of their cigars. Up early herself, she found they had already departed on another tramp over the plantation.

"What you think?" she asked Viatori.

"Sheldon marster he go along finish short time little bit," was the answer.

TO Get Poisons From the Blood

You Have to Depend on the Filtering Process of the Liver and Kidneys.

These Organs Alone Can Purify the Blood, and They Do Their Work Well When Helped by

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

No medical treatment can possibly purify the blood except as it sets in healthy working order the kidneys, liver and bowels.

To these organs is assigned the duty of filtering from the blood the poisonous waste matter which is left over when the nutritious elements are extracted from the food you eat. If they are not overcrowded or slow and sluggish in action they keep the blood pure and healthy.

For this reason Dr. Chase's Kidney Liver Pills are the most satisfactory treatment you can possibly obtain to purify the blood.

Their effects are prompt, definite and certain. The liver action is quickened, the kidneys are invigorated, the regular movement of the bowels is assured. It is only a matter of a few hours until you begin to feel the benefit of this great medicine. Further use, as often as is necessary to keep these organs active, will cleanse and purify the blood and enable the digestive system to properly do its work.

Backache, headache and bodily pains will disappear, and the fatigue which is an accompaniment of poisons in the system will give way to new vigour and energy. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

FOOD VALUE OF CHEESE

Fresh Meat Has Little More Than Half its Nourishment

A comparison of the food value of cheese with that of other highly nitrogenous food materials may be of interesting value. No kind of meat excepting dried beef carries such a large percentage of protein as cheese, and as dried beef contains a much greater percentage of water, the other food constituents, apart from the protein, are much less than is found in cheese. Fresh beef as purchased has, weight for weight, little more than half the food value of cheese in either protein or fat, and the same is true of practically all other fresh meats, which have in many cases such a large percentage of water than they are noticeably inferior to cheese in food value. Bacon or pork fat are exceptions, but their food value is mostly in the fat, which can be and is replaced to a great extent by the carbohydrates of vegetables at a much less cost, and sometimes, perhaps, at a benefit to the health of the consumer. Fish and pork each have a notably large percentage of refuse, while eggs have a high percentage of water. To sum the matter up, a pound of cheese has nearly the same food value as two pounds of fresh beef, or any other fresh meat, as food; it is worth as much as or more than a pound of ham, and is more digestible, and it is equal to two pounds of eggs or three pounds of fish.

NOVEL PLACE OF WORSHIP

A Bishop Has Consecrated a Chapel on Wheels

A chapel on wheels has just been consecrated by Archbishop Bourne. This novel place of worship is to be sent on tour in charge of two priests, for whom it will also be a residence. It is an ordinary motor-van, the interior of which is fitted with a miniature altar for the celebration of Mass, with prie-Dieu kneelers for a dozen worshippers. When not in use for Divine services the benches are stowed away, the altar cleared of its ornaments, and the vehicle becomes a travelling van, with beds for the accommodation of the two priests. The chapel on wheels will start for East Anglia, and the first stopping-place is to be Haverhill, where Father Bernard Vaughan will deliver a series of lectures during a week's sojourn in that town.

BEAUTIFYING THE DOGS

A Veterinary Surgeon Undertakes to Remove Canine Wrinkles

We hear a good deal about massage, lotions and prescriptions, all calculated to transform even the plainest woman into a thing of beauty. Now, as it appears, the canine race is being similarly taken in hand under the auspices of a veterinary surgeon in Paris. At least, in a prospectus the following list of charges is drawn up:

"Alteration of the shape of the muzzle, 50 francs.

"Change of the size of the tail, 20 francs.

"Removal of superfluous hair, 5 francs per hour.

There is some hope at last even for the veriest mongrel!

SOMETHING LIKE A PLAGUE

An Advancing Horde of Locusts Resembles a Dark Cloud

The first sign of the approaching army is usually a long, dark cloud on the horizon. As it comes nearer, it is seen to be composed of countless millions of locusts on whirring wings. Soon the cloud appears overhead, and is sufficiently thick to obscure the sun. Now we are in the midst of a dense swarm of flying, whirring locusts, which dash into our faces, enter our houses, and fill our rooms with their presence; the air is simply alive with them. All open wells must be instantly covered, or they will be polluted by the insects.

Fowls and turkeys, however, welcome the advancing hordes; they simply fatten on the locusts. But their flesh becomes so tainted by this diet as to be quite unsaleable, and even their eggs have an unpleasant taste. As soon as locusts make their appearance in a locality, the price of eggs drops to one-half or one-third of their former value.

Pigs also feed on locusts, and their flesh also becomes affected; in fact, all animals seem to be adversely affected, for horses have a strong aversion to grass which has been polluted by locusts, and, unless very hungry, will not touch it.—Answers.

TOWN CHANGES HANDS.

The Entire Municipality of Tavistock, England, Goes to New Owners

A sale of part of the Duke of Bedford's Devonshire property realized $125,000. The property sold comprised 11 hotels and inns, business premises, and about 200 cottages in the town of Tavistock, and 6,000 acres in the neighborhood. The public-houses made exceptionally high prices, otherwise competition was not keen. Business premises were chiefly secured by sitting tenants. When the sale is completed the whole of the town of Tavistock will have changed ownership.

KILLED IN A TUNNEL

Strange Circumstances Surrounding the Death of a Music Hall Artiste

Madame Gregoire, a music-hall soubrette who enjoyed considerable success as Madame Fromentin some years ago, has met her death under strange circumstances in the railroad tunnel of the Batignolles, a short distance from the Saint Lazare Station. Her husband, M. Felix Gregoire, is the manager of the Municipal Theatre of Mentone, and was formerly manager of the theatre at Monte Carlo. The other day Mme. Gregoire had decided to visit a relative at Caen. She left her house at Asnieres, but returned almost immediately in a state of great excitement. She had had a nervous attack which made her unfit to undertake the journey. She left Paris a day later apparently in perfect health. When she was returning alone in a first-class compartment, however, she suffered another attack of nervousness, and when the train was delayed in the Batignolles tunnel she opened the door and stepped onto another line where trains were passing every few minutes. The guard noticed her and called out to her, warning her of the danger. He told her that she would be killed if she did not immediately leave the track. She had barely time to return to her compartment when a train passed. Her own train moved on a few yards and stopped again in the tunnel itself, where there was no light. When the train finally stopped at the station the guard looked into the carriage and saw that the compartment in which Madame Gregoire had been was vacant. A search was made at once and the corpse of the unfortunate lady was found in the tunnel.

ROYAL MATRIMONIAL GOSSIP

The Kaiser Will Not Sacrifice His Daughter to Politics

All the numerous rumors about an impending betrothal of the Kaiser's daughter, Princess Victoria Louise, have now been denied, except the one which couples her name with that of the Prince of Wales. "Der Roland," a weekly magazine, reports that Emperor William actually made the remark credited to him: "I will not sacrifice my little one to politics." It is coming to be generally accepted as a fact that both the Emperor and the Empress would be very pleased to have their only daughter wed the Prince of Wales, not only because he is the next King of Great Britain and Emperor of India, but because they approved of his habits and training. The Empress and Queen Mary are almost puritanical in their ideas, and have brought up their children in "the straight and narrow path," so that the young people are well matched—in their mothers' eyes at least. Yet so fondly does the Emperor love his favorite daughter that no effort will be made to compel her to marry anybody unless she loves him. Every opportunity will be given her to meet her young Royal cousin and find out whether she would like to be his wife; but nothing definite is likely to be said or done. "Der Roland" asserts, for at least four years, as she is only eighteen, and the Prince of Wales is younger still.

APPOINTED LORD COLEBROOKE

Succeeds Denman as Captain of the Gentlemen-at-Arms

The King has been pleased to approve the appointment of Lord Colebrooke, C.V.O., to be Captain of the Gentlemen-at-Arms, in succession to Lord Denman, the new Governor-General of Australia. Lord Colebrooke, who succeeded Lord Denman as Chief Whip in the House of Lords, is very popular with the Liberal peers, and in that capacity he showed tact and sound judgment. The Colebrookes are a family of some antiquity. As early as the seventeenth century one of their line was serving the country as Ambassador to the Swiss Cantons and to Turkey. The Peerage was created in 1906, the present peer being the first baron, but his baronetcy goes back 150 years. Lord Colebrooke owns about 30,000 acres, including some excellent shooting in Scotland, and also extensive property in Stamford, where he derives the second half of his title "of Stebunheath." Lady Colebrooke, who is a daughter of the late General Lord Alfred Paget, is a well-known Liberal hostess.

A LIBEL ON THE EAST

A famous impresario of Italian opera had arranged to open at Covent Garden about the middle of May; but, after having made his intention public, something caused him to alter his arrangements, and he announced the opening for the beginning of May.

The day his advertisement appeared he met the proprietor of a well-known "gaff" then situated in Whitechapel, who exclaimed:

"You have done a nice thing for me, making your season a fortnight earlier!"

"What difference can it make to you?" cried the West-ender. "Your audience won't patronize my theatre."

"No," replied the "gaffer"; "but they'll be outside it picking pockets!"

Clean Man

Outside cleanliness is less than half the battle. A man can scrub himself a dozen times a day, and still be unclean. Good health means cleanliness not only outside, but inside. It means a clean stomach, clean bowels, clean blood, a clean liver, and new, clean, healthy tissues. The man who is clean in this way will look it and act it. He will work with energy and think clean, clear, healthy thoughts.

He will never be troubled with liver, lung, stomach or blood disorders. Dyspepsia and indigestion originate in unclean stomachs. Blood diseases are found where there is unclean blood. Consumption and bronchitis mean unclean lungs.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

prevents these diseases. It makes a man's insides clean and healthy. It cleans the digestive organs, makes pure, clean blood, and clean, healthy flesh.

It restores tone to the nervous system, and cures nervous exhaustion and prostration. It contains no alcohol or habit-forming drugs.

Constipation is the most common uncleanliness. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure it. They never gripe. Easy to take as candy.

THE IMPI'S SIEGE OF THE FLAMING ARROWS

DESPERATE Battle of a Beleaguered Ivory Hunter Who, with a Wounded Servant on His Hands, Defended Single Handed a Thatch Roof Fort in African Wilds Against Hordes of Natives Fighting with Fire and Bullet

PERILOUS ADVENTURES TOLDBY ABLE LIVING PERSONS

H. W. MARTIN

ABBY W. MARTIN, who relates this remarkable story, is among the foremost shooters of big game in Africa, where he has undertaken many an independent expedition into the wilds and has been employed as guide by various parties. In his eventful career he has faced death more than once, for the man that pits his wits against the cunning of the jungle beast ever carries his life lightly, but no other chapter of his experiences has the singular dramatic intensity of the one appended. The fact that a lack of ingenuity on the part of his foes enabled Mr. Martin, single handed, to hold the fort against the hordes of infuriated blacks does not in the least overshadow the dogged courage and never-say-die spirit of the lone white man battling against the bullet, flame and assegai of the savage.

BY HARRY W. MARTIN.

NEVER do I see a scrap of typewriting, even in the great city of New York, where hundreds of thousands of machines turn out primly imprinted pages, but my mind goes back to the bank of a muddy stream in the heart of the African wilds.

Elephant hunting and prospecting had brought me in 1904 to the country of Makombe, one of the most powerful of the chieftains of the Barikwes, who ruled like an independent sovereign over this land which bore his name.

Between him and the Portuguese, who held sway over that part of East Africa, there was no love lost. The agents of Portugal had finally given notice to Makombe that if he did not sell his domain to them they would send an expedition and deprive him of it by force. The ultimatum was sent just after the jealous and hostile tribe of the Goronongas had declared war against Makombe's people. The natives rose as one man to repel all invaders.

I was following a wounded elephant on the south bank of the Pungwe River shortly after the trouble began, when I saw an askari, or Portuguese native soldier, standing on the opposite shore waving a document of some kind and beckoning me to cross. He was in the nondescript uniform of the African auxiliaries, and I regarded him with astonishment for a time, as he was taking a big risk in traversing that territory alone and in the livery of the hated Portuguese. At any moment his military career was likely to come to an end, and I did not see, either, that I would be greatly benefited by his society. He seemed to be so excited and so much in earnest, however, that I went over and asked him what he wanted.

For answer he handed me a crinkled and creased and none too clean sheet of paper on which was typewriting in the Portuguese language. As I have a working knowledge of that tongue at least, I made out that he was the bearer of a manifesto warning all Europeans who happened to be near the Pungwe that they were in danger and informing them that the best thing for them to do was to get down to the fort at Mapanda. It was also set forth the Portuguese had decided to burn all the villages in the country after ten days had elapsed if the natives did not pay a hut tax which had been levied upon them.

Makombe had ignored the threat and his warriors were ranging the country in search of the soldiers of Portugal, and while they were about it, as I well knew, they were not likely to make any fine distinctions between the various species of white men.

I realized this, yet the thought uppermost in my mind was not of safety, but the property which I had been three years in gathering in peril and privation. Two days' journey to the south was my camp, in which were three tons of ivory, worth about £3,000, or $15,000, to me if I succeeded in getting it to the marts of civilization. A man longs for the life of cities, for glimpses of lights and the taste of well cooked food after three years in the jungle. Those tusks in the forest meant many things to me. The jumble of typewriting which the native soldier had thrust into my hand caused me to think quickly of what might be done.

I returned the document to him and went with all speed to look after my camp equipment and property. Manuel, an African servant, had been left in charge of the camp, and I was reasonably sure that I could get together bearers enough to transport the precious store out of the way of the marauding Barikwes and to take it to Mapanda.

My heart sank as I neared the clearing at the close of the second day, for I could see from signs here and there that some large body of men had been moving about it. Through a rift in the trees I got a glimpse of one pile of blackened ashes and then another. The huts of my carriers had been burned to the ground. My tent had disappeared and back further, where the ivory had been piled, there was not a tusk to be seen. The watchers and the carriers had been chased away or captured, and the ivory which I had collected through years of fighting the beasts of the jungle had been carried away by the hostile negroes.

I sat down upon a stump, my head resting in my hands, stunned by the extent of the loss which had befallen me. I was alone in the depths of the African forests, with nothing but what I carried and with a prospect of possibly years in these wastes before again I saw Piccadilly or Broadway, if indeed I was to come from this place alive. I do not know how long I had remained there when I was brought back to the present by a light touch on my arm. There stood Manuel.

"The master will kill me," he said, tapping the barrel of the gun I held. "Manuel does not blame."

"How did all this happen, boy?" I asked.

"I have been waiting," said he. "I knew not why when the master left me and my wife in his camp and the ivory of many elephants did he not say, 'Keep them with thy life?' And here am I—and all is gone."

The camp had been destroyed only two days before, and at the very moment I was talking with the askari on the banks of the Pungwe my camp was being sacked and spoiled.

"Many Barikwes," continued Manuel. "Impi came with feet of swiftness straight for camp. All had arms of war. I call my wife, who was sleeping in the hut, to hide. Then I went to the master's tent and got his four bore gun and twenty of the cartridges and hid, too, in the bush. My poor wife was not so quick. They of the impi took her. They took all that was in the master's tent and then the tent itself, and last of all the ivory they, lifted up and the goods. All is now with Makombe."

I assured Manuel that he had troubles enough without laying any more upon him. It was useless to treat with Makombe on the subject of returning my supplies and ivory, that I could well understand. If I ever got to his camp I would have only my own words for my pains. The chances were ten to one against my ever gaining such an audience, for the bush was full of wandering tribesmen, and arrow or assegai might at any time decrease by one the population of English hunters.

Flee for Their Lives.

The only problem that we had before us, as we had been relieved of the care of wealth, was to save our lives as best we might, so we started as soon as we could to find a refuge. I had decided that the place most likely to afford us shelter was a trading station eighty miles away on the northern bank of the Pungwe, kept by an old Greek trader named Kapsopolis. We made the station in thirty-six hours from our ruined camp, and found out from his native cook, who was in charge, that the trader had left a week before for Fort Maponda.

The station afforded some provisions and a change of clothing, to which I helped myself. The cook was shivering among his pots and pans. Every minute or so he would come out and look about him.

"Many Barikwe," he said at last, "start for fort. They kill you. Stay here, kill you too."

The cook needed a change of situation, and we could not stop him. He went without references, and we were left in full possession of the station. There was no other settlement we could make for, and we might have been in far worse places.

I accepted the view of the cook without reservation and at once we prepared to withstand a siege. What became of the old trader I never knew. He had bequeathed to us a fortification with which at least we could give a good account of ourselves. The post consisted of a large hut and four small ones in an enclosure one hundred and fifty feet square, surrounded by a stockade of logs sixteen feet in height and tightly secured. The uprights were braced by heavy timbers placed against them within the stockade, and these supports were inclined at an angle of about forty-five degrees. Such an arrangement prevented the logs from being pushed in and also from being drawn forward, as they were firmly attached to the braces.

Cleats were nailed to the timbers, on which the defenders of the stockade could climb up in order to shoot, resting their guns upon the logs of the stockade. The logs themselves were driven into the earth for six feet of their length, thus leaving sixteen feet above the surface. For a hundred feet about the stockade on all four sides the ground had been cleared, and beyond this was a dense forest, with much tangled bush in the front. The stockade was entered through two openings, where no logs had been driven, and into these spaces had been placed, one upon the other, sticks about six inches in diameter, which effectually barred the way when in position.

So much for our own little fort. I thought at the time, and it was with something of the pride of a military commander that I inspected it and gave orders to my garrison of one. Through this compound ran a stream of clear water in an ingenious arrangement of timbers which would have effectually kept out invaders. We patched up several places which looked insecure, and when it was evident that we could do nothing more for our defences that day I took account of provisions and munitions. There were two hundred pounds of flour, three hundred pounds of maize, fifty pounds of sugar and two pounds of tea and coffee.

I had [illegible] the provisions including [illegible] clothing in the strongest of the five thatched huts. Thus we were ready for the siege. Through the night we took turns in watching. The one who slept had his hands always on his weapons ready for fight on the instant.

There is a charm of suspense which precedes the going into action, and after going through such elaborate preparations to receive the dark skinned foe it would have been a real deprivation to have nothing happen. We were not disappointed. The enemy arrived in force by sunrise, giving notice of their coming by the discharge of several of the muzzle loading muskets with which many of them were supplied. Through the roof of our hut several slugs made of short sections of telegraph wire cut their way. The natives when they find no other metal available for ammunition pull down the telegraph wires and cut them into short lengths and load them into their smooth bore guns. The singing of the wire missiles in the air has a peculiar note unlike that of any projectile I have ever heard.

Occasionally we could discern movements in the bush beyond the cleared space, but as we could not see anybody distinctly enough to draw a bead we did not reply to the firing of the besiegers. There was not a single round which could be wasted, as I had only 120 cartridges for my .303 rifle and twenty for the four bore.

The natives, who interpreted our silence to mean we were killed, ceased firing and waited for two hours without making a move. Then they sent out a scout. He crept to within twenty yards of the hut in which we were concealed, looked cautiously about him and then rose up, as if he thought that the defenders of the stockade were no longer living. I raised my rifle and fired. In an instant he was lying lifeless upon the ground.

Attack by the Natives.

Then all the jungle stirred with life. Black forms rushed from out of the depths of the bush, hurling spears in air, sending a shower of arrows over the timbered defence and discharging their blunderbusses as they rushed the stockade. The shrill singing of the slugs, the twanging of bow strings, the shouts of the assault filled our ears. I felt my nerves tingle. Even under that tropic sun I grew cool and calm. The stockade resisted all efforts of the battering rams of logs which the savages hurled against it, so compactly was it built. Black hands caught the edge of the stockade, and when the dark topknot appeared a bullet went through the owner's skull and down he dropped to the foot of the wooden wall.

Out of the borders of the clearing the natives sung themselves in long lines, their well built bodies gleaming in the sun, bare with the exception of the cloth garnered about their loins. Their faces were [illegible] with fury. [illegible] and whirled they ran hither and thither, taking shots at us whenever we lifted our heads for a moment above the rim of the stockade. These negroes are not the best marksmen in the world, but they came uncomfortably near, and many a ping of the whining wire and of the beaten bullets and slugs we heard about our ears.

"The Burning Arrows," Cried Manuel. I Seized a Blanket, Mounted to the Roof and Tossed It on the Blaze

From my position on top of one of the buttress-like braces I was able to pick off several of the largest warriors. The attack was at its height when, under cover of much firing, the Barikwes attempted to pry up the poles of the stockade with levers and pointed sticks. The barrier, with its timber sunk five feet into the sun baked earth, held firm. Then the enemy withdrew to the shelter of the bush, yelling their defiance at us until their voices were muffled in the tangle and sounded like the cries of enraged spirits in some earthly hell.

We kept up the watch during the night by turns. The firing ceased and I was going off into a doze at about two o'clock in the morning when I heard something softly drop on the roof above me and then a slight snapping sound. Our hut was on fire.

"The burning arrows!" cried Manuel.

A small tongue of flame was snapping among the dried grass of the thatched roof above us. I seized a blanket, mounted to the roof and tossed it on the blaze. Out of the blackness came a burst of fire and three thunderous reports. The leaves were cut with the hail of metal which was vented from the guns of the savages. There had been just light enough to make me a shining mark in the murky night. The slugs cut about me on the thatch, whistled at the right and the left and then all was still.

I dropped lightly from the roof. The fire of that arrow was out, and then came glowing darts from all four sides. Some fell harmlessly on the well packed earth of the courtyard and flickered out; others started with lambent tips from the gloom of the jungle and were fanned out in their flight; many there were which fell on the hats and caught the tinderlike tufts. Here and there we had tried to wet down the roofs, but little of that kind of work could be done.

The rain of fire lasted two hours. The arrows, which are favorite weapons of all African savages, are slender shafts about the heads of which are wound wisps of dried grass. These tips are then dipped into boiling beeswax and permitted to cool. The natives light them from a smouldering fire which they have made for themselves by rubbing sticks of wood to get the sparks. We kept our little fire department so active, however, that the besiegers soon saw that they did nothing but what we could overcome, and they stopped their archery.

When I was not otherwise engaged I was trying to devise what I would have done if the positions of garrison and besieged had been reversed. We saw on the morning of the second day that they were up to something, so unwonted was the quiet, and we made out that the enemy was working very hard. We guessed, as we subsequently found was true, that they were trying to dam the stream. Through the leafage I got a glimpse of a gleaming headdress, and let go a rifle bullet. A warrior dropped out of the bush on his face and did not move. Without water we should have been forced to yield, but the natives abandoned the idea of cutting off our supply in that way, and they did not seem to have the secrets of the gentle art of poisoning.

The rifle which I was using so sparingly was equal to a long arm. For two days there was respite. If the living savages did not know how to corrupt our drink the dead at least were able to pollute the air. There were twenty-one bodies lying within our view as we looked over the stockade or peeped through a skillfully masked peephole here and there. The stench which came from them was such that we could bear it no longer. We made a sally toward the evening of the fourth day and dragged nineteen of the bodies further away from our camp. As night was coming on we took no more risk of going so far from the stockade and instead dragged the last two bodies into the enclosure with the intention of burying them.

One of them we got inside the barrier and we had reached shelter with the other one, we thought, when there came a shot, and Manuel lurched forward over the dead forms and lay in a faint. He had been shot in the back of the neck. I then drew the second body well into the stockade, closed up the entrance with the crosswise poles, and made ready single handed to undertake the defence of Fort Kapsopolis. Besides being active garrison it was for me to minister to the wounded and bury the troublesome dead and to watch the movements of the enemy day and night.

Surgery with a Pocket Knife.

Poor Manuel was unconscious for an hour or so, I should say, but by [illegible] water down his throat I finally restored him. He opened his eyes and gazed wildly about him. It was another hour before he could summon strength to speak.

"Bullet rubs neck bones," he said, indicating the region of the cervical vertebrae.

I knew little of surgery, but I had a smattering of anatomy. I probed for the bullet with the blade of my knife. Your white coated surgeons, with their talk of sterilized instruments, would have held up their rubber gloved hands in horror if they had seen me going after that bullet with the blade of a pocket knife. The bullet was buried about half an inch in the boy's neck. What a long suffering Manuel! For, although I manipulated in my crude way for nearly an hour before I extricated the ball, he made no complaint.

Manuel's neck had swelled to enormous size, and for forty-eight hours he was delirious. He was out of his head most of the time, calling aloud the name of his lost wife as though she were with him.

What with nursing the unfortunate boy, doing all the cooking, inspecting the defence and keeping a sharp lookout for the enemy, I had little idle time. In addition to these duties, I had dug two deep graves for the two followers of Makombe whose introduction to our stockade had been the undoing of Manuel.

It so happened, however, that for the next fortnight the Portuguese soldiers were harassing the natives, and the tribesmen therefore raised the siege and went further afield. Manuel did not seem to be gaining any better, and I was haggard for want of rest and felt myself growing feebler, although the excitement of seeing what could possibly happen next kept me always on the alert. The lull came to an end when many of the Portuguese soldiers taken ill with malarial fever, were unable to pursue the natives.

Once more the siege was resumed, and to all appearances by even a larger force. Again the lighted arrows, until it seemed that in my worn out state they seared my brain.

The fever was burning in my veins. I saw a throng of impi after impi storming the walls within which Manuel and I were at bay. I had many views of hand to hand encounters and felt the thunders of the assault on the driven timbers. I fired wildly at the advancing hosts and then I fell to the earth and all was dark.

"The Senhor has had a weary siege," I heard a voice that seemed far above me saying.

I looked up and saw that bending over me was a Portuguese officer, who was also a physician. He was attached to a regiment of natives of which the officers were Europeans.

The Portuguese surgeon informed me later that when his men reached the stockade they heard some one moaning within the main hut. They effected an entrance and there found Manuel so racked with pain that he could scarcely move. I was lying beside him in a semi-conscious state, raving of impis and sieges and black devils. Soon after this the rebels submitted to Portuguese rule and came in freely with cattle to pay taxes.

Manuel was in a bad way, but he recovered. I was too ill to be moved for a fortnight after the coming of the troops who had so providentially rescued us. As soon as I was able to travel I was carried on a litter to Mapanda, where I received the best of medical [illegible] from the Portuguese and was the recipient of many kind attentions.

A BIT OF STRATEGY

How the Quaker Succeeded in Getting His Money Back

A few years ago, when people were excited about a French invasion of our shores, a Quaker, residing at Epping, in Essex, being afraid, if such an event should take place, that he might lose his money, thought of the following stratagem to save it. He decided to hide $1,000 in Epping Forest, but for fear that he might die or be killed by the enemy he thought it would not be prudent to hide it without acquainting somebody. Accordingly, he fixed upon his neighbor, a smith, as a proper person to be entrusted with the secret.

They set out together, and chose a spot by the side of a large oak, where a hole was soon made and the money very carefully deposited; taking great care to cover it up with such exactness that no person travelling by chance that way might have any suspicion. They returned home. The next morning early the smith went and took the money away, not thinking the Quaker would so soon suspect his integrity. The Quaker, however, paid a visit to the spot where his beloved treasure was deposited, when, to his great surprise it was gone.

Suspicion immediately fell upon the smith, but, instead of accusing him, the Quaker thought of a stratagem to get his money back. He informed the smith he wished to add another $250. This had the desired effect, for the smith immediately went and replaced the $1,000, not only to prevent his neighbor from judging him to be the thief, but to get the other $250.

Away they both went together, and opening the hole, the Quaker, to his great joy, discovered his beloved treasure. He immediately fell into the following ejaculation:

"Ah, my friend, I find thee good and honest; but for fear that thee shouldst go and never return, I'll e'en take thee home, for I think thee art as safe in my house as in Epping Forest."

Thus ended the matter, to the no small mortification of the smith.

SCHOOL FOR WATCHMAKERS

A Swiss Must be Fourteen Years of Age to Enter

The famous Swiss watch-schools are said to be the most exacting industrial institutions in the world. In one of the most celebrated of these institutions in Geneva, for example, a boy must first of all be at least 14 years of age in order to enter. After being admitted, the student is introduced to a wood-turning lathe and put to work at turning tool handles. This lasts for several weeks, according to the beginner's apptitude, and is followed by exercises in filing and shaping screw-drivers and small tools. In this way he learns to make for himself a fairly complete set of tools. He next learns to make a large wooden pattern of a watch frame, perhaps a foot in diameter, and after learning how this frame is to be shaped, he is given a ready-cut one of brass of the ordinary size, in which he is taught to drill holes for the wheels and screws. Throughout this instruction the master stands over the pupil directing him with the greatest care. The pupil is next taught to finish the frame so that it will be ready to receive the wheels. He is then instructed how to make fine tools and to become expert in handling them. This completes the instruction in the first room, and the young watchmaker next passes to the department where he is taught to fit the stem-winding parts and to do fine cutting and filing by hand. Later on he learns to make the more complex watches which will strike the hour, minute, etc., and the other delicate mechanisms for which the Swiss are famous.—Weekly Telegraph.

PEARLS OF PRICE

The fact that the 116 pearls composing the necklace, audaciously stolen from a lady's neck in an Edinburgh street the other day, are valued at $33,500, might lead many people to look out hoarded heirlooms in the hope of obtaining big prices.

But unless kept in dry magnesia, pearls quickly deteriorate, and, of course, size and perfection of shape count for a great deal.

Artificial pearls can now be so perfectly produced, that only an expert can tell them from the real; and, still more remarkable, even experts have mistaken the real for the artificial.

Mr. Streeter, the famous Bond Street jeweller, once attended a sale where an antique diamond and pearl ornament, described as "paste," was offered. The bids were small, and he had no difficulty in buying it at $25. The diamonds were paste, but the pearls were real, and the lucky jeweller actually sold them for $2,500.

PERSIA'S PRICELESS PIPE

The Shah of Persia possesses, perhaps, the most valuable pipe in the world. It belonged to his uncle, who received it from his grandfather. It is the Persian official pipe, and is smoked only on State occasions.

It is set with rubies and diamonds and is valued at $50,000. When the shah is not using it, it is kept in a glass case, and carefully guarded by a high court official, whose duties are as little onerous as those of a director of an arsenal.

The reason for keeping the pipe so closely guarded, and in a case, is that some years ago a Grand Vizier was surprised in the act of removing some of the stones with the point of his poignard. What happened to the Grand Vizier, we are not told.

ADDED MANY ANIMALS

Many improvements have been made at Assiniboine Park, Winnipeg, and the birds and animals in captivity include: two eagles, three swans, six teem pheasants, three beaver, three wolves, three buffaloes, four elk, five running deer, three Angora goats, two monkeys and one badger.

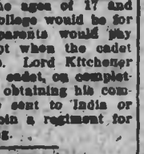
That Dragged-Down Played-Out Feeling that comes to all of us at the climax of a hot day can be banished utterly through the regular use of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey.

This feeling of tiredness, its accompanying lack of appetite and your inability to sleep soundly and restfully simply show a neglected physical condition that could not exist if an effort were made to aid the system in keeping up the performance of its duties.

Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey



is a genial and invigorating stimulant and tonic that influences for good every important organ of the body and brings restful sleep. It is a form of liquid food that aids digestion: when taken just before a meal it stimulates the mucous surfaces and little glands of the stomach to a healthy action, causing a sufficient flow of the gastric juice to digest the food, and it promotes perfect assimilation. It also exercises the kind of control for the digestion of starchy food, preventing fermentation in the stomach and bowels.

All druggists or direct, $1.25 bottle. Medical booklet and doctor's advice sent free to any one who writes.

YOUTH AND FIREARMS

Ninety-three Thousand Australian Lads to Receive Instruction

The actual training of the youth of Australia under the scheme of compulsory military service prepared by Lord Kitchener has begun; 93,000 lads will receive instruction in the use of arms. A gratifying feature of the examination of the lads enrolled last January throughout the Commonwealth is that 94 per cent. of those who presented themselves proved medically fit, and in some states the percentage was as high as 96. Lord Kitchener's scheme for Australia included a land force of 30,000 men, half to defend the cities and ports and half to be free to operate as a mobile striking force anywhere in the island continent. Cadets should join the military college between the ages of 17 and 19. The term at college would be for three years, and parents would pay $40 annually except when the cadet wins a scholarship. Lord Kitchener recommends that a cadet, on completing his course and obtaining his commission, should be sent to India or Great Britain to join a regiment for six months' training.

MADAME MELBA

Who has intimated her intention of contesting the record of Madame Sarah Bernhardt in the matter of youthful energy, by an announcement that she will invade the field of drama. The famous singer is now fast nearing the fifties, and though her bell-like voice has suffered little by the ravages of time, she is apprehensive and has seriously taken up a course of study to perfect her for the part of a dramatic soprano.

CELEBRITIES' DOUBLES

King George and the Czar Could Exchange Parts Easily

Many celebrities have had their doubles. Grant Duff records that he found "Professor Schrader so ludicrously like Huxley that I went up and shook hands with him at Lady Alford's." There was a strong physical resemblance between Tennyson and Leslie Stephen, in spite of a disparity in years, and between Jules Ferry and Whiteley, the universal provider. Edmund Yates was so like the late Shah of Persia that his photographs were sold in Brussels as the Shah's when Nasred-Din visited that city. Sir Laurence Alma-Tadema used to have a double in George Du Maurier. So closely did they resemble each other that a lady at a dinner one night addressed Du Maurier as Sir Alma, and assured him that he was "really not a bit like that Mr. Du Maurier, as people tried to make out."

It is open to the fictionist who deals in doubles to point to many instances in real life, says the London "Chronicle." King George and the Czar of Russia could exchange parts without anybody noticing the physical difference. The Duke of Norfolk and the late George Manville Fenn were almost exact duplicates in outward appearance. And two such artists in different ways as Anthony Hope and Edmund Gosse bore in their earlier years such close resemblance to each other. They were hardly "doubles," but there was a remarkable resemblance between Tennyson and Dickens. Comyns Carr in his "Eminent Victorians" tells how he once showed the poet a pencil drawing which Millais had made of Dickens after death. Mr. Carr himself had been struck by the resemblance the portrait bore to Tennyson, and was curious to see if the poet would notice it. Tennyson gazed at it intently for a minute and then exclaimed: "Why, this is an extraordinary drawing. It is exactly like myself."

AN ALL-BLACK HOLIDAY

How the Natives of the Rand Enjoy Their Spare Time

Perhaps it may interest readers to know how the natives on the Rand enjoy themselves in their spare time, and how curiously they conduct themselves on holidays.

Every Sunday morning they gather together at some appointed place—usually one of the mines—and prepare for their weekly church out. (I have seen as many as six hundred at one meeting). They are all dressed very fancily. Some have soldiers' old jackets; others old football jerseys; while others, again, wear little more than their smiles!

Most of them have an instrument of some sort, including cheap concertinas, melodeons, tambourines, tin whistles, and other such classical instruments. Those who cannot afford the luxury of an instrument commence to "sing." The terrible din when they all start playing different tunes at the same time can be imagined! They march for miles in this manner through the open veldt, and return in the afternoon highly delighted with their outing.

The Kaffirs are a very happy-go-lucky class of people. Nothing seems to worry them, and they do not believe in too much work. They may work for about six months in one of the mines, save up most of their pay, and go home to their kraals for the rest of the year.

ELECTRICITY AND BEAUTY

The Electric Age Will at Least Add to Cleanliness

It remains for the philosopher to decide whether the natures of men and women as they exist in the electric age will be finer or less fine than those that were bred in days of greater simplicity, harder work, and less luxury. But this one can say with certainty, that much of the squalor and filth, the dirt that makes both buildings and people unseemly and hideous in our great cities, will have disappeared, and their smoky dens will have become as clean and wholesome as a country villa; trees will grow in our city streets, and if environment counts for anything in the development of the human being, one may say without much doubt, the people will be a brighter, happier, and less sordid race than they have been under the tyranny of steam. What electricity will do for us in the way of beautifying our cities is another matter. It is to electrical engineering, we believe, that one must look for much of the progress we hope for in the beautification of our towns, the preservation of our buildings, and the reduction of useless labor, and if some of the eerie mystery of a dimly-lighted side street disappears, and the more garish blaze of an electric lamp shining on a clean and brightly-lighted street takes its place, it is the artist who must weep and the common man who must rejoice.—Railway News.

ATTENDING THE DEAD

Guiding Chinese Spirits On Their Way to Heaven

In Canton, about eighty miles from Hong Kong, there is a place known as the City of the Dead.

There are one hundred and ninety four small houses, in each of which a corpse is lodged, at the rate of twenty five dollars for the first three months, and then at a reduced rate until the geomancers employed by the relatives of the dead person decide when and where the corpse shall be buried.

Silk or paper lanterns an d imitation fruit are hung from the roof; there are screens in each room between the door and the coffin; tea, fruit, and any other kind of food which the dead person liked when on earth, are placed on an altar before the coffin each morning. There are cardboard servants standing about to wait on him with pipes or cardboard cups of tea. There are also two handsome paper females placed there to guide his spirit on the way to heaven.

Wants More Militarism.

"The young man of to-day is too keen to make money, to take the interest he should in military matters. I think the Canadians do as well as could be expected.

"There is not enough money spent on the militia, and I think that Roberts and French were right in what they said."

White Lies.

We sat in the moonlight—my lady and I—
And looked at the clouds that went scurrying by.

At our feet spilled the waves of a turbulent sea,
"As eternal as love," said my lady to me.

"As eternal as our love," I whispered,
"It's true
No one else in the universe loves as we do."

And perhaps ev'ry pair up in Venus or Mars
Thought that moment of lovers in neighboring stars,

Thought that moment and cared no whit more than we two,
For I know that I lied, and I know that she knew.

The Frightened Cynic.

He met three legislators.

"What do you want here?" they demanded.

He lifted his light and stared at them.

"I'm looking for an honest man," he said.

Furry.

Mary had a little lamb—
"Twas Persian—on her coat
She also had a mink or two
About her dainty throat.
A bird of paradise, a tern,
And ermine made the hat
That perched at jaunty angle
On her coiffure, largely rat.
Her tiny boots were cabin trapped;
Her gloves were muskrat, too;
Her muff had heads and tails of half
The "critters" in the zoo.
And when she walked abroad, I wean,
She feared no wintry wind.
At home 'twas warm, 'twas plain to see,
She had all nature "whitewed."

NORWAY'S INCOME TAX.

It Reaches All Incomes in Excess of $83.08 Per Year.

How should you like to pay an income tax on next to nothing? If you were a Norwegian living at home and earning $194 a year you would be taxed on one-tenth of it if you were unmarried; on about one-twentieth of it if you were married and had no children. If you had children you still would be taxed on one-fiftieth of it.

With an income of $536 a year you would be taxed if unmarried on more than half of your income, if married and having no children on about 40 per cent of your income, having one child on about 37 per cent, two children on about 31 per cent.

Unmarried and having an income of $2,680 a year in Norway your income tax payment would be $421.22; married, with one child, $389.94; married, with six children, $355.17. All that you would get off your income tax (married) for having six children would be $66; all that you would get off by having five more children would be $44 and six bits!

Married or unmarried in Norway, you could escape paying an income tax only by having an income less than $83.08 a year. Think of paying an income tax out of earnings of $7 a month!—New York Press.

LONDON, JULY 28.—Following a night of activity such as not been seen in naval circles for years, the first division of the home fleet, which includes some of England's biggest Dreadnoughts, reported to-day ready to proceed to sea instantly on receipt of orders. The Morroccan situation, however, is quiet to-day. Berlin papers are silent while the feeling in Paris is very optimistic. Great activity prevails at Woolwich arsenal, where the employees of the Lyddite factory are working under the highest pressure.

Rev. W. J. McColl was heard, and said that the portion of the St. Peter's Total Abstinence property used for the purpose of the library and for religious instruction and religious meetings, was exempt by law, and asked that the taxes on this portion be remitted. The matter was laid over.

The following applications regarding taxes for 1911 were read:

From Adam Hall for remission of business taxes on No. 407 George street, as he had left the premises. $26.46 was remitted.

From H. Bradburn, that he was wrongly assessed for lots 61 and 62, plan 120, instead of lots 51 and 52, plan 120, and that owing to the mistake there were arrears of taxes for the years 1900 and 1910 against lots 51 and 52.—Laid over.

From A. Grieve, for refund of taxes for 1911 on a house at No. 184 Lisbourn street, which was burned in April, 1910. Council recommended to refund $4.31 to correct the error.

From W. Langford, jr., that he was assessed twice on a lot, lot 9 on London and George streets and on Bethune street. The taxes on the Bethune street property were remitted.

From B. F. Ackerman, Son and C., and from the Auburn Woollen Co., that there was an error in their assessments and that they were greater than their assessment notice showed. The matter was laid over.

From Chas. Grant for remission of taxes. Granted for whole amount.

REGULATIONS IN REGARD TO THE CANADIAN NAVY

Special to The Examiner

OTTAWA, ONT., JULY 28.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier to-day tabled the agreement reached at the Imperial conference regarding the Dominion navy. The navy is to be exclusively under the control of the Dominion government with the training and discipline uniform with the British service and the men and officers interchangeable under the agreement. Canada desiring to send a ship to a foreign port must arrange through the British foreign office, while the commander of a Canadian ship in a foreign port must send a report of his actions to the British Admiralty and obey orders from the British government when in company with British ships. The senior officer will have command so long as his orders do not conflict wth the orders from the Canadian government. In the time of war, when the naval service of the Dominion has been put at the disposal of the Imperial government, the ships will form an integral part of the British fleet and remain under the control of the British Admiralty during the continuation of war. The Canadian Atlantic station includes the water north of thirty degrees north latitude and west of the meridian 40 degrees west logitude, while the Pacific station includes the waters north of 30 degrees latitude and east of the meridian 180 degrees longitude.

OUTLOOK IN DURHAM

Liberals May Nominate Mr. T. A. Kelly, of Cavan—Reciprocity is Strong in the Rural Sections of Riding

CONVENTION AUGUST 21st

Special to The Examiner:

MILLBROOK, JULY 28.—The announcement that the country is soon to be plunged into a Dominion General election has caused a wakening up of political activity throughout the County of Durham, and the Liberals of the riding are determined to make the fight of their lives to carry the banner of reciprocity to victory when the opportunity is afforded. Durham County has been generally looked upon as a pretty safe Conservative seat. Up until eight years ago the County had two members. The East Riding consisted of the Townships of Manvers, Cavan and Hope, the Town of Port Hope, and the Village of Millbrook, and has been very strongly Conservative since Confederation. In the year 1874, the late Louis Ross of Port Hope, was elected by the Liberal party. From that time and down until the two Durhams were thrown into one constituency, the East riding was very strongly Tory. The West Riding previous to the combining of the two ridings, was made up of the Townships of Cartwright, Darlington and Clark, the Town of Bowmanville, and the Village of Newcastle. It was somewhat consistently Liberal, Hon. Senator Beith being able to hold the constituency for the Liberal party for several terms. In the general election following the combining of the two ridings into one, Sir Alan Aylesworth, who was an outsider and a complete stranger in the riding, was defeated by H. A. Ward, barrister, of Port Hope, by about 200 votes. In the election of three years ago, Mr. D. B. Simpson, barrister, of Bowmanville, running as the Liberal candidate against C. J. Thornton of the Township of Darlington, was defeated by over 600. The Liberals of the County do not believe that this 600 Conservative majority represents the normal standing of the two parties, and they believe that with the very strong feeling in favour of reciprocity throughout the county, together with a strong candidate, they can capture the seat.

The Liberals of the County of Durham have a strong man in view. If they are successful in inducing Mr. T. A. Kelly of Cavan, to enter the field a red-hot contest is assured. Mr. Kelly is by far the strongest man in the Liberal party in Durham County, outside of Senator Beith. He is personally, very popular, and his great strength in the Conservative Townships of Cavan and Manvers would tend to break up the large Conservative majorities that have been a feature of all former political contests in the riding.

Mr. T. A. Kelly is a young man with a good, clean record in municipal life. For a number of years he has given valuable service to his native township in the Municipal Council. To-day he is Reeve of the Township of Cavan, President of the Millbrook Agricultural Society, and Warden of the united counties of Durham and Northumberland. He is well-known throughout the entire county. He is young, active, and possesses good business ability. "Sandy" Kelly is a successful farmer, who appreciates the value of reciprocity to the farmers of this district, and would make an ideal representative. A strong effort is being made to have him consent to allow his name to go before the party convention which is to be held on August 21st at Newcastle.

If Mr. Kelly enters the fight he will surprise the front townships in the strength he is bound to show in Cavan, Manvers and the Village of Millbrook.

ALTERATIONS BEING MADE TO PEOPLE'S CHIMES TO MAKE THEM LOUDER

Interesting Statement From Rev. Canon Davidson in Regard to the Bells---Charges for Ringing Them for Weddings Has Been Fixed---Other Information That Will be of Interest.

The following statement has been handed the Examiner for publication by Rev. Canon Davidson:

Since the inauguration of the chimes on Coronation Day much thought and work has been expended and heavy expense incurred with the object of bringing out the beautiful tone of the bells. Half the shutters have been taken out,a sounding board has been placed over the bells and a galvanized iron floor beneath them. A complete extra system of chiming by ropes and special hammers called the "Ellacombe System" has been installed, supplementing the original system of wires connecting the tongues of the bells with a keyboard.

The committee have endeavoured to the very best of their power to carry through this great enterprise in the best possible way, and are still looking out for methods of improvement.

It has been discovered that local conditions, such as the unusual amount of foliage throughout the city, interfere somewhat with the bells ount of foliage throughout the city. Again, while not heard in low-lying portions or behind large buildings, they are clearly heard on the heights around. The prevailing wind, of course, is a strong factor. But the purity and sweetness of the tone will compensate for any drawbacks. It is most exceptional for chords to be possible on a chime as is the case on ours. Altogether, Peterborough has a unique chime, of which the city may well be proud.

Some time will have to elapse, of course, before the best can be brought out of the bells, and practise and experience will be necessitated.

However, the chimes are now ready for public use. As one effort in this direction, a programme of music will, for the present, be rendered at about 8 p.m. on Saturday evenings, for the pleasure of the public and as a suggestion of the approach of the Day of Worship and of rest.

The fee for the use of the chimes for the weddings of citizens of Peterborough without regard to religion has been fixed, until further notice, at the low sum of $1.00, payable to the Chimer, application to be made to Mr. John Butcher, on St. John's grounds, or 301 Burnham street, who will procure the necessary consent of the Rector and Wardens. The bells may be chimed at the conclusion of the ceremony, or when the bridal couple are driving to the station. The applicant will state, in writing, the exact time at which the chiming is desired.

Mr. R. J. Devey has consented to act as Chimes Master, and Mr. John Butcher has been appointed chimer.

Any suggestions, with a view to further public usefulness, will be welcomed and receive careful consideration.

CONFESSES TO MURDER

NEW YORK, N.Y., JULY 28.—Paul Qiedel, aged eighteen, confessed to-day to the murder yesterday of W. Jackson, the aged broker at the Iroquois hotel. CANNOT SAVE "EMPRESS"

TOKIO, JULY 28.—It is reported today that the Canadian Pacific steamer, Empress of China, which struck a submerged rock yesterday, cannot be saved.

Trip Was A Success

An enjoyable moonlight excursion under the auspices of the Woodmen of the World, took place last evening.

The steamer "Stoney Lake" left the Wolfe Street wharf about 8.30, and, after calling at the Street Railway wharf to pick up more passengers, proceeded down the river.

During the evening various amusements were indulged in. There was abundance of music, to which several terpsichorean exponents of the art found room to trip it on the light fantastic toe.

The music was furnished by Mr. Jack Elliam, pianist; Mr. Gardner, 'cellist, and Messrs. Bridge and Tucker, violinists. Mr. Castle ably performed the duties of M. C.

Home was reached about eleven o'clock.

WILL GIVE RETURNS OF BY-LAWS

Examiner Will Bulletin To-night the Figures in Connection With the Measures Being Voted on To-day

POLLING IS LIGHT

The ratepayers are voting to-day on the by-laws to borrow $20,000 for the establishment of new parks and for the fixing of the assessment of the B. F. Ackerman, Son and Co. and the Peterborough Lock Manufacturing Co. The polls are closed at 5 o'clock this afternoon and the Examiner will, as usual, bulletin the returns, which should all be in before 6 o'clock. Inquiries at different polling places at noon would indicate that the polling is light.

Three fifths of the vote polled are required to pass the two industrial by-laws, while a bare majority is all that is needed for the parks measure.

HE FELL FROM FIFTH STOREY

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, JULY 28.—Robt. Candler fell from the fifth floor of the Kent building, now in the course of construction and died shortly afterwards. He tripped in stepping from an elevator to the construction platform and fell to the ground.

BIG EXCURSION ON AUGUST 7

The Bowmanville lawn bowlers are running a big excursion by special G. T. R. train on Monday, August 7. Bowmanville's civic holiday, and will bring a record crowd of excursionists to Peterborough. A number of rinks of Bowmanville bowlers will be here to take part in the big tournament under the auspices of the Peterborough Lawn Bowling Club, which opens on August 7. The majority of the excursionists, however, will go down the Otonabee to Jubilee Point. The steamer "Stoney Lake" has been chartered and will take the party over the lift-lock before proceeding down the river. It is significant that in the advertisement of the excursion the announcement is made that "returning boat arrives at Peterborough at 7 p.m., giving excursionists an hour and one half, to visit the Sheffield of Canada."

MORE TROUBLE AT THE FIRE HALL

The miniature menagerie of the fire department has been somewhat depleted by the loss of five members of the feline tribe. The story of the disappearance of these five would-be rat consumers is a very harrowing one, indeed, and one that dates back a number of weeks. It appears that two cats, whose pedigrees are as great a mystery as the cause of gumboils gave birth to a couple of litters of kittens. One day the mother of one of these charges decided to go for a joy ride on the ladder truck. Whether the speed was too much for tabby's conscience, or whether she recognized some old acquaintances, is not known. She jumped off the rig at Perry street, and four kittens at the fire station were left to mourn her loss. It then became the painful duty of the one remaining cat, at the station, to adopt these waifs into her own family of one, with the result that her family cares began to assume large proportions, but her burden was not for long. Some one of the members of the fire fighting fraternity, whose name, fortunately, is not known, undertook to annihilate four members of this happy family.

The out look for a long and happy life for the remaining one jumped to 100 per cent., and would have remained there, had it not been for the avariciousness of a stray dog. This bone-herded mongrel slipped into the hall, eluding the eyes of the watchman, and kidnapped the one remaining kitten, white Davey, the mascot, slumbered and snored with an air of sublimity that would turn the stomach of an Angora goat, and the driver of the ladder whistled "Just Before the Battle, Mother," in the rear of the building. Life is full of inconsistencies.

URIC ACID SUFFERING

Uric acid is an accumulation of poison which finds lodgment in the system when the kidneys fail to remove it from the blood. In the kidneys and bladder it forms stones, in the joints and muscles it causes rheumatism. In any case the pain and suffering is almost beyond human endurance. Uric acid is promptly removed from the system when the kidneys are kept healthy and active by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

FRIDAY, JULY 28, 1911

NO REDSITRIBUTION NOW.

It is quite certain there will be no redistribution before the coming election. This is greatly to be regretted, but it cannot now be avoided. The law, several years old, makes it obligatory to take the census in June and in June it was taken accordingly. The Opposition have for months been refusing to vote the supplies of the year, and the government cannot force their hand. On the Opposition must rest the full responsibility for the present unsatisfactory position of the question.

Evidently Mr. Borden is quite alive to the fact that this responsibility is sure to prove embarrassing. He wishes to make it appear to Parliament and the country that the government is to blame for the failure to pass a redistribution measure. In a recent speech he said "the Prime Minister knows that he and his colleagues weeks ago made a careful estimate of how they would stand with redistribution and without redistribution and that they came to the conclusion it would be safer to appeal to the people without redistribution."

The only value this statement has is as an index of the state of Mr. Borden's mind on the question; as a description of the attitude of the government it is obviously and ludicrously untrue and absurd. It is quite certain that the west will be entitled to an increase of members when redistribution is carried out, and not even Mr. Borden himself has any doubt that this means an increase in the relative strength of the Liberals in the House of Commons. Why, then, should Sir Wilfrid Laurier prefer to appeal to the people without redistribution. As a matter of fact, it will trick him out of from five to ten of the majority to which he is fairly entitled according to the trend of public opinions.

It is not at all likely that the people of the west will be in the least degree deceived by Mr. Borden's attempt to throw the blame on the governments for the injustice to which they have been subjected, and which cannot be redressed for several years to come. It is not unlikely that the feeling of indignation thus aroused may even now redound to the government's advantage, but it cannot compensate for the loss of several seats. It is more likely to have the effect of increasing Liberal majorities over their individual opponents.

Now that the die is to be cast for an early election, the earlier it is the better. The effect of the prolonged discussions of this exceptional year has been anything but promotive of trade and industry and the issue should be promptly disposed of now so as to get rid of the uncertainty. To all appearances the polling will be in the first week of October, as good a time as any for both the east and the west. It is a time ordinarily of good weather, and good weather tends to make the campaigning less vexatious.

MR. BORDEN AS PARTY DICTATOR.

Before Mr. Borden made his Western speeches it was still open to the Conservative Opposition to let the reciprocity agreement go to a vote in the House of Commons, and it was still open to any private member of the Opposition to vote for it, as not a few of them would like to do. It was open to the whole party to change its attitude on the subject to the extent of making it an "open question," scattering in the division on the proposal to ratify the agreement, and so preventing the issue thus raised and decided from doing them any serious injury as a parliamentary party. In this way the question would have been disposed of and Conservatives all over the country would have been free to vote with their party, as usual, at the general election a year or so hence.

Mr. Borden's western speeches have changed the situation entirely. He said he does not believe reciprocity would be a good thing for the country, and he claimed to be saying so in good faith. It is useless to question his sincerity on this point, for there is no reason to doubt his word. He stated and reiterated that even if he were returned to office at the election he would never submit such an agreement for ratification and would not support it, no matter by whom it might be submitted. His attitude is one of not merely intolerance of, but active and aggressive opposition to, reciprocity, in farm products. It is within his right to take this stand, but it is equally within the right of other Conservatives to decline to stand with him on this platform.

The dictatorial attitude of Mr. Borden on the subject of reciprocity, puts an end to any hope the Conservative farmers may have had of getting free access to the United States market, unless they use their votes to maintain Sir Wilfrid Laurier in power for at least another Parliament. If the present agreement is not ratified it will be a long time before another can be made that will be as favourable to Canada. If it is ratified and proves unsatisfactory it may be amended by another agreement, or dropped altogether. Why should a Conservative farmer, who understands the situation, not vote in his own interest, and in the interest of the farmers of Canada, generally? Who gave Mr. Borden the right to settle such a question by his own personal word of command? Not that way are great public issues properly dealt with in a deliberative assembly.

It is well known already that in the coming contest many Conservatives farmers will, on this question, vote against their leader and their party. They would gladly have avoided this dilemma if they could have done so; but Mr. Borden has made it impossible, and he has himself to thank for any disaster that may happen to him as the result. To all present appearance he will be so badly defeated that it will be necessary for him to retire from the leadership of his party, and allow it to be reorganized on a more liberal platform by some man who has greater breadth of view and more parliamentary aptitude.

THE COMING ELECTION.

There seems to be no longer any room for doubt that, within a very few weeks the country will be in the midst of one of the liveliest and hottest general election campaigns through which it has ever passed. For this premature demise of the present Parliament the blame or praise—which ever it is to be—must be accorded to the Conservatives in Opposition. The natural and normal course would have been to let the business of the present session be completed by taking a vote on the reciprocity agreement, and to hold another session for the purpose, among other things, of passing a redistribution bill. This is what the Liberals have been planning to do, and what they have found themselves unable to accomplish.

But though the Liberals would have been better pleased to hold another session, and to take advantage of it to readjust the representation of the electoral districts in accordance with the results of the recently taken census, they are not going to allow the holding of the election to scare them or worry them in the slightest degree. They are already making necessary preparations, and they will now be in a position to take up with vim and determination a contest which bids fair to be short, sharp, and decisive. The shorter, the sharper, and the more decisive the better.

It is the duty of Liberals everywhere to make a speedy and careful selection of candidates. That is at this moment the matter of greatest urgency, if not of the greatest importance. It is always difficult and often impossible to win with a poor candidate even under conditions otherwise favourable. There is so much at stake in the pending contest that extraordinary care should be taken to avoid making blunders in the selection of standard bearers.

The local organization is a matter of supreme importance. It is a bad disappointment after the campaign to find that votes enough to turn defeat into victory have not been polled. There should be no neglect in the matter of getting people to mark their ballots, and this will now be especially the case with the farmers' votes. A little time effectively spent in impressing on the voters the absolute necessity of putting in their votes should do much good.

There will be many meetings held on both sides, and it is well to be prepared with speakers. Those who speak at Liberal meetings should act on the presumption that the main, often the only, issue, will be reciprocity, and that to be effective they must be well informed. Many a campaign has been lost by the speakers of those who did not know their subject, and who had audiences too intelligent to take things for granted. It is a great advantage to a good speaker to have the number of his subjects cut down, but it makes his task more difficult unless he has mastered his great theme.

The Liberal managers at Ottawa should see to it that an abundant supply of suitable campaign literature on reciprocity is distributed. It is a good thing to have multitudes of small leaflets to distribute, either before or after each meeting. The case for reciprocity is so strong that speakers can well afford to be moderate, and not to either make exaggerated statements, or allow themselves to become needlessly exercised over the 'wickedness' of the other side.

When the reciprocity agreement was first submitted to Parliament a number of capitalists, who did not like it, put up a considerable amount of money, which has been used to get local journals to publish articles. Such hired service is usually ineffective, however, and perhaps they will be found so in this campaign. The issue is simple, clear, and definite: let the election on the Liberal side harmonize with it in these respects. The certain outcome in that case will be the return of the Laurier Government to office with an increased majority.

HOW THE MOROCCAN SITUATION DEVELOPED

Germany sent a warship to Agadir. The Moroccan situation developed. Why a crisis should be precipitated by such an act is only clear after a study of the international suspicions and jealousies which have been centering around Morocco for years. France, England, Germany and Spain have been waiting for any move on the part of either of the others which might be construed as an intimation of intention to gain control of the stormy empire of the north-west corner of Africa.

Germany's action is held to be significant because Agadir, the best roadstead in Morocco, is not in the immediate neighbourhood of the disturbances which are given as the pretext for the Panther's presence. On the other hand, there has been no attempt to land German forces. The country remains, as it has been for years, under the immediate protection of France. The insult, if insult there has been, might seem directed more particularly against that nation, yet it is Britain which appears more perturbed, and it is Britain against which the German press directs its comments upon the situation.

At the root of all the trouble is the inability of Morocco's five million inhabitants to live at peace among themselves. Mulai Hafid, proclaimed Sultan in 1907 and acknowledged by the Powers in 1908, does not seem to have succeeded much better than his predecessors in maintaining order. Morocco is rich in minerals and wheat. It exports cereals, eggs, almonds, olive oil, wool and cattle. France, Germany, England and Spain have large commercial interests there. These are imperilled by the continual outbreaks, and Germany declares that the Panther was sent to Agadir merely to protect her subjects and her trade. The responsibility for such protection rests mainly with France. In 1904 an Anglo-French agreement was reached, whereby Britain acknowledged that it appertained to France to keep order, and France bound herself not to interfere with the political integrity of the Moroccan empire. Spain arrived at a similar agreement later in the year, and Germany followed in 1909. In all of these cases France agreed that the commerce of the other contracting parties should be on an equality with her own. It is, however, the international conference of 1906 which is most frequently mentioned in connection with the Moroccan situation. As the result of this gathering at Algeciras, arrangement was made for a police force of 2,500 under Spanish and French officers to assist the Sultan. It does not appear to have been a complete success.

There is a crisis in Morocco, not because of what has happened, but because of what the happenings are taken to portend. Britain's deep concern is due to the belief that Germany is about to interfere with the administration of the African empire, although she would thus be breaking her pledge with France. In Germany such interference would be justified on the ground that France has failed in her part of the agreement by permitting disorders which have imperilled German commerce. The situation, however, is one which is open to peaceful adjustment. A conference of the powers, such as forecasted by a rumour on the London Stock Exchange, would be the sensible way out of a difficulty which may otherwise result in war.

The Veto:—"My word! I shall be off in a minute!"—London Opinion.

INTERESTING PARAGRAPHS

From Farm and Dairy.

By a vote of 53 to 27 the United States Senate passed the Canadian reciprocity bill on Saturday afternoon, and only the obstruction of the minority at Ottawa stands now between Canada and the larger markets.

Robert Spooner, eighth concession of Mersea township, Essex Co., Ont., died recently at the remarkable age of 113 years. Mr. Spooner was born in England in 1798 and came to Canada when about 10 years of age. He has lived over a century in Ontario.

An unique agricultural carnival was held near De Kalb, Ill., on July 8. Farmers from different parts of the State had sent in a lot of old relics of the agricultural past and during the day there were exhibitions of striking contrast of the time that was with the time that is. Harvesting by means of the various implements from the reaping hook to the self-binder demonstrated the evolution of our modern harvester, which has made possible our present-day agriculture.

The Executive of the Toronto Milk and Cream Producers' Association met with the Milk Dealers' Executive to confer with reference to an increase in prices of milk and cream to producers. The dealers realise the conditions existing of a scarcity of feed, causing a shortage of the milk supply, and concede that producers are justified in asking an advance in prices of milk and cream. We recommend that each producer ask his dealer for an increase of 15 cents a can for milk and three cents a lb. butter fat for cream, commencing July 15th.—A. J. Reynolds, secretary, Scarboro, Ont.

The District Representatives of the Ontario Department of Agriculture, situated in various parts of the province, are to make a tour of inspection in Northern Ontario during the first week of August. The party will consist of 10 representatives together with Mr. Putnam, Supt. of the Farmers' Institutes, and Mr W. R. Reek, Secretary to the Deputy Minister. The party will leave Toronto on July 31st, the first stop being made at New Liskeard. The object of the tour is for the purpose of acquainting the representatives with the possibilities of Northern Ontario, in order that they may the better wield a large influence in directing the proper class of settlers to Greater Ontario.

The C.P.R. will give $750 and a valuable silver plate as a prize for the best 10-acre stand of alfalfa grown on irrigated lands in 1912. Alfalfa is generally recommended by the C.P.R. agricultural authorities as one of the best paying crops grown in Alberta; and where irrigated lands command the highest value per acre, alfalfa is one of the leading crops. With the idea of encouraging the cultivation of this valuable crop in the irrigated district, the C.P.R. has issued a bulletin offering these valuable prizes: first, $250; second, $200; third, $150; fourth, $100; fifth, $50. The company particularly desires that the area sown be inoculated with old alfalfa soil and will furnish this properly sacked. Seed will be supplied at wholesale prices.

WIRING TREES

From Farm and Dairy.

Is wiring trees, would you recommend placing any material between the wire and the bark to prevent cutting? At what age would you advise grafting young trees two years planted?—J. A. R., Ontario Co., Ont

The wiring of large trees is done by passing a wire around the branch, making a loop at least a foot and a half in length, then passing the wire across the tree to another branch and making a smaller loop. This is done at the time the branches begin to weigh down with fruit. After the fruit is picked, the branches, of course, return to their normal condition and relieve the pressure on the wire. There is no injury to the branch and no danger of the branches breaking down under the weight of fruit, and if done in this way there is no necessity for placing any protecting material under the wire. Some bore a hole through the branches, run the wire through and fasten it with a bolt or something similar on the under side of the branch.

FEEDING VALUE OF WHEY

From Farm and Dairy.

The feeding value of whey does not seem to be sufficiently appreciated by patrons of cheese factories in Ontario. At many factories the patrons cannot be induced to haul the whey away from the factory, and it is run out into a nearby stream, to be a source of disgusting odors and a trouble to the whole country side. Occasionally a patron is found who is making good use of the whey in feeding hogs, and he will almost always tell you that it is the cheapest hog food available. The following experiment, conducted at the Ontario Agricultural College, will be interesting to those who are debating as to how they can use whey profitably.

A bunch of hogs was divided into three lots. Lot No. 1, fed on meal only (wheat and barley mixed with an equal weight of shorts), showed made 100 lbs. of gain on 391 lbs. of fed. Lot No. 2 were fed whey and made 100 lbs. of gain on 381 lbs. of meal and 860 lbs. of whey. Lot 3 made the same gain on 383 lbs. of meal and 819 lbs. of whey. On this basis 750 lbs. of whey is equal to 100 lbs. of grain. We can afford to haul away the whey when it has a feeding value such as this.

THE HUPMOBILE Guaranteed for Life.

Is making as strong a hit in Peterborough as in all other places where it has been introduced. Call and see it and be convinced. Prices—Touring Car, $1000; Runabout, $850.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

There is a certain species of human being which appears in large numbers just about now for which I have a very deep sympathy.

It is the summer widower.

Of course one hears a good deal of fun made of the summer widower in newspapers and summer theatres. "In these" he is represented as blithely singing, "My wife's gone to the country, hurrah, hurrah," or some similar ditty, and preparing to have the time of his life. But I have an idea that this kind of summer widower flourishes mainly in the papers and in vaudeville.

Ninety per cent. of the real-life variety of summer widower is decidedly "more to be pitied than blamed."

And more to be admired than either.

For my part I'm sure I never admire a man more than when I meet him taking a lonely stroll of a summer evening or smoking a pipe on his vacant piazza and am told with evident pride, in answer to my query for his better half, that she has gone off for the summer "with the kids."

I think men are rather less given to self-pity than women, and this is certainly one of the occasions that would seem to prove that, for I never met a summer widower yet who complained or even seemed to think he had the slightest cause for complaint.

Can't you imagine the indignant self-pity that the average woman would indulge in if her husband and the children went off for two months and she stayed at home and did the housework?

The vicarious delight which many of these summer widowers seem to take in the good time their families are having is really beautiful. They show me the pictures of the kids paddling in the water, read me fragments of her letter telling how little Dottie's nose peeled that terribly hot day and how Roger has learned to swim, with unconsciously touching pride and never seem to think of saying, "And here I am digging away all day in that hot office and coming home at night to an empty house."

Yes, of course, I know what you are going to say—you wives of the summer widowers. You are going to say that you wouldn't think of leaving him if it were not for the children, but you don't feel that it's right to keep them in the hot city all summer.

That's what you all say.

And I agree with you on that last.

But suppose you took the children away for a month. If he has two weeks' vacation that he could spend with you that would only leave him alone two weeks.

Or suppose you took them to some place near enough so that he could run down week ends and perhaps two or three times a week.

Do you think they would suffer under those conditions?

No, of course I don't understand your individual case. Doubtless you have very good reasons.

Anyway I didn't write this to quarrel with you.

I just wanted to register my thorough sympathy with, and admiration for, the man at home—the man who finds his relief from the city heat in pictures of the kids paddling in the water and his relief from the day's monotony in bulletins about Dottie's nose and Roger's swimming and yet never thinks of setting himself up as a martyr.

Three cheers for him and a tiger—those're my sentiments. And may he receive full appreciation from those from whom it is due.

PETERBOROUGH BOY WITH CRACK WINNIPEG CREW

Mr. Walter Robinson, an old Peterborough boy and son of Mr. T. W. Robinson, had his share in the recent triumphs scored by the Winnipeg Rowing Club at the Duluth Regatta. The Winnipeg oarsmen won eight out of eleven events. Mr. Robinson was a member of both the winning junior fours and the junior eights. A Winnipeg paper says:

In the junior four event the contest was almost as exciting as the senior eights and Winnipeg pulled in the winners, making the time of 8.44 by two lengths over Duluth, who came next in order, the Minnesotas and Fort Williams being in the rear. Winnipeg was well to the front from the start and each of the crews rowed on an average of between 36 to 40 to the minute. Fort William rowed well and headed Minnesota for a while and each of the crews dropped their stroke to 30, spurts being made from time to time by Winnipeg and Duluth. The Winnipeg crew rowed splendidly and though they were pushed to their limit they arrived in the victors. The four was composed of C. S. Belcher (bow); W. Robinson, A. Johnston and A. B. Jackson (stroke).

McGRAW'S HEATED COMMENTS

CINCINNATI, JULY 27.—Manager McGraw of the Giants, created a scene in the fourth inning of Monday's game when he was put out of the game for disputing a decision at the home plate. Umpire Johnstone had called Capt. Mitchell of the Reds safe at home on the ground that Catcher Wilson did not touch him, though the throw beat the runner to the pan. McGraw made a hearty kick and continued it as he went to the bench. He grew so raw that he was finally ordered off the field. Leaving the New York bench he walked to the plate and, shaking his finger under Umpire Johnstone's nose, said so loud that he could be heard all over the field: "The trouble with you is that you've been drunk all season and I can prove it. You're a common drunkard. Look at your red face and that will prove it. You're drunk all the time."

McGraw kept up this line of talk for three minutes before he condescended to leave the field.

McConnell For New York Hill-Toppers

NEW YORK, JULY 27.—The New York American League Club yesterday purchased pitcher George McConnell from the Rochester Eastern League club. McConnell was a member of the New Yorks in 1909, but was sold to Rochester after a brief trial. He will join the Highlanders at the end of the Eastern League season. It is said the price paid for the pitcher by the New York Club is between $8,000 and $10,000.

The price is probably wrong. New York had an option on McConnell's services, when they sold him to Rochester, and they are merely exercising that privilege. The figure is probably $2,500.

How Dooin Was Hurt

ST. LOUIS, MO., JULY 27.—Charley Dooin, manager of the Philadelphia National League Club, who was put out of the game for the remainder of the season, when his leg was broken when Outfielder Oakes slid to the plate, will remain in a hospital here until Sunday.

Physicians announced to-day that no new complications or more serious effects are likely.

The Quakers will not have his services as catcher, not even at the wind-up of the pennant race. There is not a possible chance, it is declared, that Dooin's shin bone, which is broken above the ankle, will have knitted before the season ends.

Pat Moran, last remaining receiver of the club, will take Dooin's place.

BASEBALL

The Peterborough Midland League team will journey to Cobourg tomorrow for a game with the Cobourg team going down on the special G. T. R. train on the excursion under the auspices of the C. G. E. Mutual Benefit Society. It is expected that Second Baseman Jimmy O'Hearne will be back from his holiday trip in time for the game. Craig will be an absentee on account of holidays but otherwise the team will be the same as usual.

The Printers will be unable to play the return game with the Peterborough printers in that city on Saturday. An effort was made to secure a special train to leave here at 1.30 o'clock, in the afternoon, but satisfactory arrangements could not be made.

The visit to Peterborough will likely be made at a later date.—Lindsay Post.

EXCURSION FROM LINDSAY

The steamer 'Stoney Lake' brought an excursion to Peterborough last night via Trent Canal, under the auspices of St. Mary's Catholic Club of Lindsay. A big crowd was on board the steamer when she reached here and the excursionists spoke in glowing terms of the enjoyment of the trip. The weather conditions were perfect. The party returned home on the 9 o'clock G. T. R. train, after a couple of hours in Peterborough.

Peterboro' County Cheese

From Farm and Dairy.

Peterboro Co. cheese in the season of 1910 and in former years has commanded a higher price than cheese sold at any other board in Ontario. Peterboro cheese would not have had such a reputation were the patrons of factories in the county permitted to receive back the whey in the milk cans. At no factory in the county is this practice permitted.

The strong point of Peterboro cheese is its flavor. Buyers can come to the Peterboro board with the assurance of getting good flavored cheese. Our practice of leaving the cheese in the factory two weeks before shipping has contributed to the good flavor, but the biggest reason of all is that whey is never carried in milk cans.

I realize that the problem of taking care of this whey is a serious one. At most of the factories in the county, a great deal of it is wasted. We must have some system of feeding the whey at the factory or of giving to each patron an equitable share of this by-product.

DON'T RETURN WHEY IN CANS

I believe that pasteurization of whey would pay in increased feeding, but even with pasteurization, I would not advocate carrying whey home in the cans. Cheese makers are only human, and if steam were low there would be a tendency to under-pasteurize the whey, and bacteria and yeasts would develop and bad flavors would be disseminated to all of the patrons of the factory.

I do not see why cooperative piggeries, if located at sufficient distance from the factory to avoid odors, should not be successful. At the Zion factory, the patrons cooperate in feeding the whey to pigs at the factory with good results. At the Pine Grove factory, Mr. Little, the maker, has bought the whey from the patrons and fed it to pigs with profit. If the cheese maker can profitably use the whey, surely the patrons can make equally profitable use of it by cooperative feeding.

If we are to retain the reputation for our cheese we must keep away from the practice of returning whey in the milk cans.

A milk house of the better class, but nevertheless one that can be built at comparatively small cost by any farmer of average mechanical ability, is that on the farm of Mr. W. J. Telford, of Peterboro Co., Ont. An illustration showing this stand appeared on this page of Farm and Dairy last week. The walls are made of single ply boards, the roof is shingled. The milk is cooled in a water tank. Ice is used on warm Saturday nights.

A noteworthy feature of this milk house is its facilities for ventilation. Large sliding doors on the back and front admit of a free draft of air when the wind is blowing in that direction. On either side is a slat arrangement similar to the grate in the door of a furnace. For a space of four feet the wall of the house is made of three inch slats nailed on three inches apart. Inside of this is a sliding door of three inch slats three inches apart. By moving the door back three inches, the side can be made open. The main doors of the milk house may be closed and locked, and these slat doors be open and there be good ventilation and protection from cats and so forth.

"Since some of our neighbors," said Mr. Telford to an editor of Farm and Dairy when at his place recently, "take no particular care of their milk and allow rain water to get into it on occasions when the rain falls, a milk house such as mine is not as good an investment as it otherwise would be. However, we have the satisfaction of delivering good milk and never having any returned."

Mr. Telford's farm is entered in the Interprovincial Prize Farms Competition this year.

SUMMER SALAD

Cook a quart of shelled fresh lima beans as usual, by boiling in salted water. Do not add butter When done, drain the beans and chill them. Peel and cut into very small dice, two crisp, tart summer apples, and chop fine two sweet, green bell peppers, from which the seeds and ribs have been removed. Mix all together with mayonnaise dressing flavored with tarragon vinegar and a few drops of onion juice and arrange on lettuce.

SALAD OF NUTS AND GREEN PEAS

A delicious salad may be made by combining green peas and English walnuts in the proportion of two-thirds peas to one-third nuts and mixing with mayonnaise dressing. Serve on lettuce. If tomatoes are in season slice small ones and arrange around the salad inside the lettuce.

Flourished Revolver In Face Of Father-In-Law—Now Out On Bail

Man Arrested on Above Charge Now Awaits Trial—Wage Case Settled—Parties Get Together After Court and Get Into Mix-up, Then Try to Lay Charge of Assault.

Silas Nichols, of Bridgenorth, who has been lodged in the County gaol for the last three days, was allowed out on bail, yesterday on his own bail and two sureties. It appears that his wife is Wm. C. Cullen's daughter, and when she had left him, he went over to Cullen's home and flourished a revolver in the face of his father-in-law, with the result that he was arrested and lodged in gaol. He will appear on Tuesday for trial.

The non-payment of wages case was also settled. Edward Fontain, a young Englishman, laid charges of non-payment of wages against Geo. Gowan and Wm. Whitefiled, of North Monaghan, with the result that the case was compromised, the two defendants paying $2 costs each and payin gthe complaintant $1.00 each for two month's work. Fontain stated that when he hired with Whitefield, the latter promised to pay him $15 per month and a free house, but he would not give him anything. Mr. Whitefield denied this bargain and stated that he had promised to give him what he was worth, but that he had been sick some of the time, and was no use to work anyway. Both parties were somewhat agitated over the affair, and when they got out of court, it was at first thought that they would come to blows. Newspapers were used as clubs and were freely used for a few minutes by two of the women, but they were finally separated. Mr. and Mrs. Fontain then proceeded to the police station to lay a charge of assault against one of the other women, but the Chief advised them to let the matter rest, as it would only mean more expense and little satisfaction. They consented to do this, and went their way.

Magistrate Edmison did not go to Norwood to-day, as the case had been settled. The peddlar paid the necessary fee and the charge was withdrawn.

Bail was taken this morning in the case of Silas Nichols, who flourished the revolver. He paid $500.00 and there were two sureties of $250 each, making in all $1,000.00.

USEFUL POINTS ABOUT PACKING OF TRUNKS

The other day a girl who was going away for a month's visit was consulting a friend as to what frocks to take.

"Put everything you own in your trunk," was the friend's advice, "because if you leave one thing behind you that will be sure to be the thing you want."

Acting on this principle a girl who is going to a popular summer resort may as well take all her frocks, even one or two cool weather ones, although the wearing of them may seem to the city dweller an impossibility.

When it comes to packing, there is quite a knack in knowing how to fold the gowns and coats, and where to place the different articles to the best advantage.

Should there not be a hat box of the right size in the trunk, stuff the crown of the hat to be packed with a soft underskirt or underwear, lay it flat on the bottom of the trunk, take a piece of cardboard as long as the width of the trunk, with an inch at each end at the bottom to be bent over. Place the cardboard across the trunk, so as to keep the hat snugly in place and secure it by tacking the bent flaps to the sides and bottom of the trunk. Lay a piece of tissue paper around the crown to cover any feather or flowers. Light weight soft articles can be folded the exact width of this compartment to fill up around the hat.

Roll everything possible, because done this way they take up the least possible space, keep the front of the rolled articles turned out, fold in the sides to the exact width of the space to be occupied and roll from the top down.

In folding blouses, first button them, lay smoothly with front down, turn the sleeves across the back, as when they come from the laundry, and lay flat in the trunk.

When packing a skirt, lay on the bed, front breadth down, fold the sides back, or this to the exact width of the trunk, laying a piece of crushed tissue paper in each fold to avoid a crease, wherever the skirt has to be folded over to shorten it to fit the trunk, lay a roll of crushed tissue paper. Every bit of lace and trimming must be carefully pulled out, and put into place. Crushed tissue paper should be put into the sleeves as padding.

All small articles, such as belts, jabots, handkerchiefs, etc., should be tucked in to fill up corners. Pack tightly and the clothes will come out better than when they have room to shift about. Slippers and shoes will fit into all sorts of corners, with one stocking stuffed inside the shoe, and the other wrapped around the outside.

To pack a coat is a thing which requires deftness. Put a hand in each armhole, fold the outside of the sleeves together smoothly, then push one sleeve over the other so the lining is outside, smooth out the lapels and collar, and lay a roll of crushed paper where the coat is folded across. Shirt waists may be rolled with impunity if the sleeves are folded on the back, then rolled with front out.

Be sure and have a label on each end easily distinguishable, in case you have a hunt for your trunk, when you will find hundreds, perhaps thousands—it will seem like millions—looking alarmingly like yours.

No Insulation In Wire That Killed Wm. Spence Evidence At Inquest

TORONTO, JULY 27.—That electrocution was the cause of the death of William Spence on July 18 last, was the decision of the coroner's jury at an adjourned inquest held at the Morgue. The investigations were conducted by Coroner J. W. Wigham.

The evidence showed that William Spence was joining additional wires to a cable crossing Chester street at its intersection with Bloor for the Bell Telephone Co., when the sliding chair or cradle from which he worked came in contact with a live wire of the Toronto Electric Light Co. Spence collapsed in his chair, and the fatal wire fused, one section of it falling across the Toronto Street Railway Company's wires.

A section of this wire was presented to the jury for examination, and it was asserted that the piece clasped in Spence's hand when he was removed from the chair, was completely bare of insulation.

That the wires in Toronto are a disgrace and a constant menace to the life of the lineman, owing to the insulation being badly worn; was the emphatic and startling statement of William Morden, a co-worker on the lines with William Spence; he continued that he had been the victim of several pretty severe shocks, and he attributed the saving of his life to the fact that, as yet, he had not touched a bare spot.

According to the electrical experts, after three months' weathering, the insulation of an electric wire no longer is a dependable insulator, and is unsafe to touch or handle without rubber gloves.

LIGHT THAT DOES NOT FAIL

A Volcanic Beacon in San Salvador Republic

The republic of San Salvador is the only government on earth that collects lighthouse fees on account of a volcano that it owns, and without the slightest cost of upkeep.

The volcanic beacon is about eight miles inland from the port of Acajutla, and its pillar of cloud by day and its fire sky by night are visible for many miles out to sea. It bursts forth every seven minutes, and is just as accurate as any revolving light that warns mariners of danger in any part of the world.

This volcano has been keeping up this seven-minutes' service of eruptions ever since anyone can remember. It is a favorite amusement of visitors to sit by the hour during the lazy afternoons, and, watch in hand, to time the eruptions till they tire of the occupation and fall asleep. No one has ever caught the volcano napping, however.

Every vessel that puts in at Arajutla has to pay its lighthouse fee. There is no other lighthouse than the volcano, but that is a sufficient excuse for the Government of Salvador to make a charge for its services. The explosions that accompany the eruptions sound like detonations of heavy charges of dynamite, but, fortunately, they are not sufficient to shake the ground perceptibly more than about a mile or two from the summit of the crater.

Size of the Lump

Prisoner:—"I've a lump as big as an egg on the back of my head." Mr. Fordham:—"What kind of an egg—a hen's egg, a duck's egg, or a roc egg?" The prisoner described the size of the lump, and Mr. Fordham observed, "Oh, a bantam's egg."

Aged Millionaire Is Murdered In Hotel---Was Beaten To Death

NEW YORK, JULY 27.—Burglars beat Wm. H. Jackson, a millionaire broker, with offices at 7 Wall street, to death in his rooms at the Iroquois Hotel, at 49 West Forty-fourth street to-day. His body was found on the tenth floor of the hotel by employees who went there after members of his firm had become anxious about him, and asked that he be called. The burglars had apparently tried to chloroform Mr. Jackson, as he slept, and he awoke and made a brave fight for life, only to be beaten to death. He was seventy years old.

Jackson was a member of the firm of Van Schaick and Company. The Iroquois Hotel, in which he was murdered, is a fashionable family hotel, one of the residents being District Attorney Whitman, whose suite was on the same floor as that occupied by the murdered man. The robbery and murder created a great sensation and every available detective in the city is working on the case.

Got Through Windows.

Jackson went to the hotel on June 2. The windows of his suite overlooked the roof of the City Club building, which adjoins the hotel on the west. The burglars came over the roof of the club, it is believed, and entered the Jackson suite through the windows.

Jackson went to his room last night about 8 o'clock, and was not seen alive after that time. When Edward Stanard, an elevator boy, was sent to the room to call him and to leave the morning papers he noticed that the door was partly open. He thought nothing of that, but knocked and then put the papers inside. Sometime later a chambermaid went to clean the room. She saw the body of Jackson lying under the side of the bed and fled to the corridor, shrieking.

Coroner Winterbottom was hurried to the hotel. He found an empty bottle, which had contained chloroform, lying in the bathroom. It was plain that there had been a desperate struggle, as all over the room were blood spots and the chairs were overturned. The sleeping victim had been awakened by the attempt to chloroform him and despite his age had grappled with his assailants. His pajamas were torn to shreds, the skull was laid open by a terrific blow there being a deep gash over the right eye, and there were numerous wounds on the head and upper portions of the body.

Every pocket in Jackson's clothing had been turned inside out. All of his jewelry was missing. While it was not known how much booty the robbers secured it was said to have been considerable, as the dead man had been in the habit of carrying large sums with him.

THE ADMIRAL'S ROUBLES

A Short Story.

By Sydney Matttingly

"Talking of the nerves of Russian admirals," said Chidsey, waking up suddenly as Patterson, the champion golf bore, concluded an unusual tedious story, "I am reminded of a tale I heard the other day from an unimpeachable source" (that is where Chidsey's stories come from) "though, to be sure, it illustrates their nerve rather than their nerves."

He paused and looked around for encouragement. Getting none:

"Well, if you insist," he proceeded, "you shall have the yarn—I don't know how many of you chaps know Monte Carlo. Of course, I know the place pretty well, having spent several winters there in the nineties. That was before the time of my story, though."

"It is a well known fact that Chidsey has never been out of his own country.) But no matter.

"I've forgotten," said Chidsey, warming to his work, "the name of the admiral, but it began with an 'R' and was full of y's and i's. Anyway, it doesn't affect the story. Well, 'R' was in command of a cruiser squadron at the time, and he had been taking it to have tea with the Sultan of Constantinople, or as near to it as they'd allow him to get. The business of the trip was concluded—I fancy it had involved the collection of one or two small overdue accounts, and that the squadron was a sort of final notice—at any rate, they were on their way back to Gibraltar when the admiral concluded that he'd earned a short holiday and accordingly dropped anchor in the Bay of Monaco, which, on the face of it, was rather out of his course, and slipped quietly ashore in time for dinner.

"After dinner, the old boy not unnaturally drifted into the Casino. I don't know if he'd ever been in the rooms before, but the sight of the whirling ball fascinated him at once and what was more natural than that he should take a turn. By the end of the evening he had evolved an ingenious system, so far as I can make out, something on the lines of Lord Rosslyn's. It consisted of staking the maximum every time on something—it didn't matter what. That night he lost 200,000 roubles.

"Of course, after that, 'R' naturally concluded that one or two days' holiday, more or less, couldn't make much difference to his imperial master, so the Russian squadron had their sailing orders countermanded, and every afternoon the giddy old admiral went ashore in his steam pinnace, and every evening he succeeded in adding a little more to the Russian national debt. About the third night he effected an improvement in his system; it now consisted in staking the maximum on two different tables which doubled the excitement and gave him a little exercise in the bargain. By the end of the week he had succeeded in dropping the nice little round sum of 1,500,000 roubles. I believe it leaves very little change out of $1,300,000.00.

"When the croupier had raked in his last stake, the admiral got up from the table quite calmly, and walked out. There had been a good deal of excitement, as there always is when there is a big gamble going on, but 'R' was the least excited person in the room. He never turned a hair.

"He walked up to an official, however, and said he wanted to have a confab with the management, and, according to rules, was trotted into the private room where they deal with those of their clients who exceed the speed limit. I can't tell you exactly the words the admiral used, but I can give you the sense of them.

"'I regret to say,' said 'R' 'that I am broke.'

"The suave official was extremely sorry, and he told 'R' so, very nicely. He was aware, of course, that he was talking to a plunger, and in such cases the management of the Casino knows how to be liberal.

"'I have dropped somewhere about 1,500,000 roubles,' the admiral went on, still quite calmly, 'and, unfortunately, about 1,450,000 of them didn't happen to be mine. Part of the money is the pay of the squadron for three months, and the rest belongs to the Imperial treasury.'

"Now, at this the polite official was quite genuinely depilated. You see, at Monte Carlo they don't like international complications, and a live admiral, in command of a squadron, applying for his visitique was something rather out of the ordinary run, and the polite official intimated that the management in such a case would certainly wish to be generous, even liberal. If the admiral would make a proposition, he would be treated with all possible consideration.

"'R' was not to be outdone by politeness, even by the polite official.

"'This is most charming of the management,' he declared. 'It makes my request much easier to make. I have mentioned the amount of my losses. You can verify it roughly by inquiries. All that I ask is that my money be returned to me. It would be convenient if it were sent out—in gold, to my flagship in the morning.'

"By this time the polite official was gasping for breath; for the moment he could not utter a word.

"'Not later than twelve o'clock,' added the admiral.

"The polite official recovered his power of speech with a rush; he pointed out how impossible, how unheard of, how—adjectives failed him—such a suggestion was. The management were doubtless prepared to strain a point; they would realise that this was no ordinary matter of visitique; they desired no scandal; but business was business—

"'Quite so,' said the admiral crisply; 'and I should like the money to be on board not later than twelve o'clock. You see, if it isn't, at 12.15 I train my guns on the Casino and open fire; and by half-past you won't be able to remember what it looked like.'

"And with that, 'R' walked out, strolled down to the front, boarded his pinnace and went out to his ship, as cool as an iced pudding, or whatever they call them at Monte Carlo, at which it was decided that 'R' was obviously mad and would probably have cleared off with his squadron by the morning.

"Morning came, however, with the cruisers still in the bay, and the management, who had been thinking the matter over, and saw possibilities of a mutiny when the crews discovered there was no money for their wages, sent the polite official out to the flagship to offer the admiral $50,000 to go.

"When arrived on board, however, he was received by a young officer as polite as himself, who told him that the admiral was, unfortunately, asleep. 'However,' said the polite young officer, 'if you have found the pocketbook which he mislaid last night, his excellency told me that I was to wake him. Otherwise, he is on no account to be disturbed—till 12 o'clock.'

"On hearing this, the polite official tumbled hastily over the side, and dashed back to the Casino to call another directors' meeting. After talking things over at great length, and finally not deciding anything—which is what directors' meetings are for—the directors came out of the Casino and noticed with satisfaction that there was signs of unusual activity on board the cruisers. It was 11.45.

"'They are evidently preparing to weigh anchor,' said one director.

"'Yes,' added a visitor of naval appearance who was standing by, 'and before they go they are preparing to fire a farewell salute. It is to be hoped,' he added jocularly, 'that their guns are charged with blank shell. Those of the flagship appear to be trained directly on the Casino.'

"It was exactly 11.58 when the polite official arrived the second time on board the flagship.

"'Will you inform the admiral,' he panted, 'that his pocketbook has been providentially discovered?'

"It arrived on the flagship during the afternoon, and took three men half an hour to hand it overboard."

There was a silence when Chidsey had concluded his story. "I had that story," he remarked, "on the most unimpeachable authority. You can believe it if you like. It is probably quite untrue."

UNWELCOME VISITORS

The tarantula, the native of the banana patch, has become a very frequent and also a very unwelcome visitor to this city. They have been discovered in bunches of bananas, and running around through the fruit stores, but the latest in the city has been the street-walker. This morning a local man was walking along Charlotte street, and somewhat to his surprise and discomfort, met one of these tarantulas in front of a fruit store. There was nothing near with which to swat the intruder, and eventually it got away. The tarantula was quite a large one, and when the startled citizen went to put his foot on the "terror of the South" it sprang two or three feet away.

GIDEONS WILL PLACE BIBLES IN EVERY BEDROOM OF THE LOCAL HOTELS

Mr. A. H. Patience, Assist.-Secretary of the Gideon Bible Movement, spent Thursday afternoon and this morning in the city interviewing the hotelmen regarding the Gideon Bible Movement and will have the consent of every hotel proprietor to place the book in their many bedrooms. Mr Patience says the hotel men of Peterborough are a good bunch of fellows and are thoroughly in sympathy with the work.

The Gideons are an association of Christian travelling men, pledged to carry the gospel with them seven days in the week and stand in their places as Gideon did in Judges, 7: 21. Although the movement in Canada is hardly five months old, they have placed 5000 bibles since the association was organized in Canada on March 4 of this year.

It was first thought of by the Christian travelling men in England 3 years ago, and has been organized in the United States 12 years, they having held their twelfth annual convention in Milwaukee, Wis., July 22 and 23. Although Toronto sent delegates expecting to bring the convention to the city for next year, they were disappointed, the convention going to Atlanta, Georgia, for 1912, but the association has been assured that the convention will be held in Toronto in 1913, and it will be the largest gathering of Christian men ever held in Canada.

Some of the towns Bibilized in Canada are: Toronto, Hamilton, Dundas, St. Catharines, Niagara Falls, Brantford, Paris, Guelph, Oshawa, Port Hope, Trenton, Beaverton, Midland, Newmarket, Aurora, Thorold, Welland, Merriton, Collingwood, Owen Sound, Sarnia and many other smaller ones.

THE DEATH OF GEORGE MALEDON OFFICIAL HANGMAN

FORT SMITH, ARK., JULY 27. — Within a stone's throw of the final resting place of men whom he sent to eternity at the end of a hangman's rope, the body of George Maledon, who for years served as official executioner of the United States court at Fort Smith, was buried this week.

Maledon, despite reports that he was haunted by the spirits of men whom he had hanged, and that he was afraid to sleep in an unlighted room, lived to the ripe old age of 87 years, dying in the soldiers' home at Johnson City, Tenn.

More than the usual amount of trouble allotted to man fell to the man who legally executed more than 60 men, but he was always jolly. In his declining years he performed the duties of hangman as ably as in days when he established the reputation which made him the most dreaded man in the western country.

Maledon attained his record of 60 hangings in the 22 years he was a turnkey at one of the most notorious jails in the world, and would have hanged many more but for the election of a Democratic president of the United States, which let out all federal employees in Fort Smith.

Also Shot Two.

In addition to the number he legally executed, Maledon shot two men to death. Twenty-two men were legally executed at Fort Smith after Maledon left the Government service, Deputy Marshal George Lawson performing the gruesome function.

With Maledon the hanging of men was a business and an art. Few men who fell through the trap of the Fort Smith gallows died of strangulation — it was nearly always a case of broken neck. His willingness to perform a duty shirked by most federal employees kept Maledon in his position with each change of marshals until he finally retired to make room for a Democrat.

With the passing of Maledon there remains in Fort Smith but one reminder of the death dealing machine which from 1874 to 1896 snuffed out the lives of 88 men. This is the trap of the old gallows. This trap is now the front porch of a cabin which stands near the site of the old gallows, and the feet of children patter upon it daily. Now the site of the old gallows is a part of a business centre.

Did a Wholesale Business.

Maledon came to America when an infant from Bavaria in 1839, and was a resident of Detroit until he was grown, then going to the Indian Territory, where he soon became a deputy marshal. During the terms of Marshal Logan T. Roots he was made turnkey and hangman the position he held for 22 years.

While he served as hangman Maledon twice hanged six men at one time, the trap of the gallows being of sufficient size to accommodate it without crowding. Three times he executed sets of five, and as many times executed four at once. Four times three men were legally hanged by Maledon, and double executions were too numerous for his attention in after years.

"I have never hanged a man who came back in after years to have the job done over again, for the ghosts of men executed at Fort Smith never hang around the old gibbet," Maledon once said when questioned as to the reports of his mental disturbances.

After he was relieved as federal hangman Maledon toured the Indian Territory and other parts of the southwest, exhibiting his ropes and parts of the gallows, being greeted by large crowds everywhere. He finally gave up the venture and went into the grocery business in Fort Smith, later retiring to a farm in Washington County, where he remained until too aged to work. He was admitted to the soldiers' home in Tennessee, a reward for his services in the union army.

Fractured Her Hip

Mrs. George Maitland of Peterborough, has received the sad news from Ottawa that her mother, aged 74 years, has been the victim of a painful and serious accident. In some manner, when on her way to call on a neighbour, she slipped and fell fracturing her hip.

EXPERIENCE INVITED

From Farm and Dairy.

W. A. Foster, Prince Edward Co., Ont.

Farm and Dairy has invited silo owners to give their experience with different models of silos. To many just now that is an interesting subject and I shall give my experience.

I have made use of silos for a number of years. The first silo we constructed was octagon in shape and was built of scantling and lined inside with matched lumber. The next was a stave structure built of spruce. This silo has since been taken down and replaced with the "Ideal Green Feed Silo" purchased from the Canadian Dairy Supply Co of Montreal. This silo is built of spruce, planed, grooved and tongued, bevelled and splinned, with an almost complete patent-door front, each door fitting any part of the doorway perfectly. The material has also soaked in a special wood preservative.

No. 1. was built too small in the days when ensilage was used in limited quantities only. No. 2. was in use for 15 years as a winter silo, giving good satisfaction. It also was too small.

I may say here for the benefit of the cement agent that the planks from this silo was used for flooring when the silo was taken down and with the exception of a very little at the bottom of the staves they were as sound and good as the day they were brought from the lumber yard. Silo No. 3. "The Ideal," size 30x16, cost: $325 cash when erected, the cost of the foundation, chute and top to be added. It is proving very satisfactory.

Living as I do in a dairy district where many first-class silos of the different makes, cement, steel and wood are to choose from, I finally decided on the Ideal, which can have only two objections — blizzards and fire. The danger of blowing down can almost entirely be overcome by making a perfectly level and solid foundation for the silo to sit on and by insisting on a first-class job in every detail in the erection of the silo. Finish it with a neatly built, half-pitch, circular roof, which adds to the capacity in filling. Then put a few heavy guy-wires on to ensure perfect safety. As for fire, it costs very little to insure the silo, which can be replaced at little loss.

The best features of the Ideal are the short time required in erection, freedom from frost, the air tight door-front, ease of getting out silage and the neat appearance of the structure. We have found it to keep corn in perfect condition the year round with no waste or damaged silage. I may add that good, well-eared corn ensilage in good condition will make the best ensilage in any silo.

KIT'S COLUMN

(Copyrighted)

Everything has been said and written of the tragedy of New Ontario. Homilies have been preached on the unwisdom of the race after gold, but always, until the world ends—if it ever will, which is altogether another story—men will seek wealth. The fire it out. Men and women are dead and buried. New homes are up-up-springing on the ashes of the old. Life, checked for a moment by the raging flames, goes on again, and new people are rushing into camp eager to grasp that gold which has been made the god of the world. The dead are forgotten save by those who loved them. Time, hastening upon his way, has already softened the first poignancy of grief and each day [illegible] seek increasing. Men must forget else they would go mad. The fight for money goes on and why not, since money buys so much that makes for ease and comfort. It cannot buy back youth or health, or the beloved who have left us, but it can do so much besides! What wonder that men seek it at peril of life itself. There are three things without which it seems that men can not exist: a God, gold and a drug. Have you not noticed that always with every tribe and race there must be a thing to adore, to pray to, to venerate? With some it is the sun, others worship fire; others again sticks and images. Some worship God, some themselves. Gold or silver or copper or some form of exchange or barter—this, too, seems necessary to mankind, hence the mad race for wealth. And something in the form of drink that will bring dreams or forgetfulness, be it whiskey, or opium, or hasheesh, or hemp—something all men seek at one time or another is a draught of Lethe. Travelling in British Guiana one time, the writer came on a camp of Indians who were living in tribal relations: that is, they were natural beings, primitive, peaceful, extremely moral and decent generally. But they had their Lethe, and whiskey and morphine being unknown, they brewed something of fermented potatoes—a horrible looking and ill-smelling mess of which every man partook till he fell helplessly into the land of dreams or of nightmare. This after a great hunt. They had their God or Great Spirit, too, to whom they prayed and made sacrifice, and they had their beads of exchange—their money, their idea of wealth. Just as the little Bushmen have it, as all men have them—these three things—a God, gold and a drink. The wild rush for gold in Porcupine—as long ago in the old '49 camps—is only, after all, man seeking one of the three things he deems it necessary to have.

Now that the "imprecatory" verse breathing vengeance and other things has been cut out of the National Anthem and more peaceful lines substituted, attention is being called to the "imprecatory psalms" over which churchmen are excited since they were condemned by Canon Glazebrook, head of Clifton College. The psalms in question are the 35th, 69th and 109th—but there are others such as the 58th Psalm of David which are the subject of comment. David sings of the ungodly:

"Break their teeth, O God, in their mouths: Let them consume away like a snail. . . . . let them not see the sun."

This, however, is mild in comparison with the 109th—the psalm described by St. Chrysostom as prophecy under the form of imprecation. This is apparently directed against some individual, some prominent enemy of the psalmist:

"Set Thou an ungodly man to be ruler over him; let satan stand at his right hand."

When sentence is given upon him, let him be condemned: and let his prayer be turned into sin.

Let his days be few: and let another take his office.

Let there be no man to pity him: nor to have compassion upon his fatherless children." And the other verses which doubtless you will remember.

The question is, or rather the controversy is over the question whether these vengeance-breathing psalms are or are not harmful to the young. Canon Glazebrook holds that they are and asks that they be discontinued in the church service. The Rev. Howard Bainbridge, one of the minor canons of Westminster, thinks, on the contrary, that they are not harmful because "there is no personal feeling in them"; that being merely historical.

As far as one's personal leanings go, I agree absolutely with the canon. These psalms breathe a spirit of hatred which is incompatible with Christianity and Christ taught it. Such words are unfit either becoming or getting upon young lips. We are all naturally cruel people more, some less. Cruelty is a thing which has to be educated out of us. We are more prone to malice and hatred than to love and kindliness. The evil word comes easily to the tongue. What of scandal and backbiting among neighbours, and the word that depreciates, and the smile that murders a woman's good name? Who is it that turns the other cheek? Why should words of wrath, and vengeance—which we are taught belongs to the Lord (the Lord being the only One who never takes it) be permitted in the beautiful service of the church. If those awful wishes and imprecations were not a personal matter with the Psalmist, as the Rev. Howard Bainbridge puts it, why did he pronounce them? If you or I hated a man or a woman who had done evil to us and we went out in the road and cursed him aloud, his eyes, his teeth, his children, and goods—the nearest policeman would very quickly arrest us and "run us in." If we wrote down our imprecations and sent them to, say, the editor of this journal, he would very soon throw them in his waste basket and moralize in a leader on the evil temper of some people. Because they are in the Book of Books, that Book which the archbishop tendered to his majesty the King the other day in Westminster Abbey as "the most valuable thing in the world," does not make them wise, or merciful, or even good reading. They could only be harmless if they were heedlessly gabbled by the minister or the congregation, and we are all, of course, well aware that such never happened or could happen.

They tell us that the world is progressing. There is room for it to advance in ways of brotherly love and kindliness and mercy to all living creatures. No doubt, in due course, the time will arrive when imprecatory verses will be expurgated from the Bible, and people will not be hanged by the neck till they are dead for crimes against the laws and against mankind. We have commenced with the National Anthem. We may end with the gallows.

We women of Christian creed who so keenly feel the pangs of jealousy if one of our liege lords turns an appraising eye on the charms of one younger and maybe fairer than ourselves, how would we stand for plural wives? I feel the roots of my hair growing hot at the very thought of it. Another woman, other women, with equal rights to what one is pleased to imagine her own particular property! Get thee behind me, Satan. And yet there are plural wives a-plenty in this fresh and fair young country of ours. And there are more coming in to people the spreading prairie land of our West. The Canadian Courier is doing public service in publishing a series of articles on the growing of polygamy in Canada, and Nan Moulton, the author of this series of keen and capable articles on this subject, is doing even greater work. Her story of the women of the Canadian Mormon settlements is a bit of vivid writing which brings the matter home to us in a very direct way.

Woman is a living sacrifice to Mormonism. She is its slave and its victim. For her life is one long drudgery. That is what she is, drudge and child bearer. And, because she believes in the teaching of her creed, she bears her face with infinite patience, some cheerfulness and much silence. We have let a corroding evil enter Canada, for, deny it who may, it is now proved that polygamy is practiced in Canadian towns where Mormonism has a foothold. It is advanced in their favor that the Mormons make good settlers; that they are a sober, industrious, law-abiding and progressive people. That they are all this, is "in the main, correct." But if on the other side of the scales we place polygamy, it outweighs all the goodness, all the industry, all the sobriety and honesty of this people. The Blue Books, we are told, "are silent. The newspapers won't touch the subject." Only here and there facts leak. A woman whispers, but whispers are faint things which might easily be mistaken for the wind in the trees. Yet the wind is far-sweeping and sometimes the whisper reaches a listening ear. But it is not the ear of the government which seems to be afflicted with deafness on some subjects. However, the warning note has been sounded. This is a clean country and it is to our good and our interest to keep it so. If Mormonism cannot exist without polygamy, then Mormonism should not be tolerated in a young country with as brilliant a future as Canada.

The surmise that the woman, Angelina Neapolitana, would have the death sentence commuted to one of life imprisonment has proved to be correct. It is rather a pity that the change in the sentence was not made before our American neighbours got busy with our affairs. It was funny to read denunciation of Canada and her laws by people who are familiar with the third degree method, and who have on their legal records such absurdities as the Thaw trial with its vulgar sensation, and many other instances of legal blundering and incompetence. This, too, in the face of the assertion made time and again by Americans who have settled in our great West that "the laws here suit us better than our own over the line." Not once, but many times has that very remark been made to the writer, as well as "Your laws protect property, and are easy to follow." We feel safe under them." Canada has no reason to learn from the States.

We are glad indeed, that the life of the unfortunate woman of Sault Ste. Marie has been saved, but we could wish that instead of lonely imprisonment for life, she, with her child, was placed on a prison farm and allowed to work out her salvation under the bright hopeful ray that work and companionship brings. In any case, the Way of Atonement is hard, just as the Way of Sin is the road of the Fool.

To turn to lighter things. Is this good enough to copy in your diary, or paste in your hat? I have found it helpful:

Cure—For a fit of passion, walk out in the open air; you may speak your mind to the winds without hurting anyone or proclaiming yourself a simpleton.

For a fit of idleness—Count the ticking of a clock; do this for one hour and you will be glad to pull off your coat the next, and work like a beaver.

For a fit of extravagance or folly—Go speak with the inmates of a gaol. You will learn something.

For a fit of ambition—Go to the churchyard and read the grave-stones. They will tell you the end of ambition. The grave will one day be your bed-chamber, and the earth your pillow; corruption your bosom friend, and the worm your bedfellow.

For a fit of the blues—Look on the good things God has given you in this world and be thankful. He who goes into the garden to look for beetles and spiders will surely find them; while he who looks for a flower may return into his house with one blooming in his bosom.

In the west of Ireland, at a little town that I know, two men fell out the other day over a game of cards, and one lay in wait for the other and killed him with a spade. This was irregular card-play with a vengeance, for nowhere is it laid down in the rules that if you hold a spade you should hit your adversary with it.

For blessed are the peacemakers on earth. Henry VI., Part II., Act II., Sc. 2.

Shakespeare lived in a fighting age. He was just sixteen years old when Drake returned from his celebrated voyage around the world after plundering and humiliating Spain on many seas. He no doubt as a young man mourned the chivalric death at Zutphen of that romantic poet and soldier, Sir. Philip Sidney. He was just beginning his great career in London when the Spanish armada was gloriously defeated and destroyed and all England thrilled with the news of the valiant deeds of her sons. It is somewhat astonishing that neither in his dramas or poems does Shakespeare allude to the deeds of Drake or the magnificent victory over the Spanish Armada. The truth is that Shakespeare was a lover of peace.

In dealing with historical characters he necessarily had to touch on war, the pastime of kings; but war to him was hateful, and peace was admirable. He believed that, "Blessed are the peacemakers on earth." War was to him "grim visag'd"; it gored the gentle bosom of peace "with pillage and robbery." Its tongue to his ears was "harsh and boisterous." On the other hand it was the speech of peace that bore "such grace."

Under his own vine, what he plants, and sing
The merry songs of peace to all his neighbors."

In drawing his hero king, Henry V., he created a warrior who was essentially a peacemaker. In the very "maymorn of his youth," when urged by the bishops and venerable statesmen to invade France, Henry hesitated on account of the awful nature of war. He fought only in the interests of peace.

The man who is instrumental in bringing about peace without bloodshed is more deserving of a victor's crown than the greatest warrior the world has ever produced. There are few wars that have disgraced mankind that could not have been avoided. Duelling was a common practice for centuries. Gentlemen, like savage beasts, settled their disputes by bloodletting. Disputes are quite as frequent now as they were in ancient days, but the Anglo-Saxon world, the most highly civilized, has forever banished duels, and cowards are no commoner than they were of old. War between nations is as insanely foolish as was duelling between individuals.

In several of his plays Shakespeare clearly states his attitude towards peace. In "Henry IV.," Part II., he writes:

"A peace is of the nature of a conquest;
For then both parties nobly are subdued,
And neither party loser."

In "Coriolanus" Volumnia, the mother who gloried in the battle deeds of her son, voices Shakespeare's feeling with regard to the blessedness of peace in her appeal to Coriolanus to spare Rome.

"No; our suit
Is, that you reconcile them; while the Volces
May say, 'This mercy we have show'd; the Romans,
'This we receiv'd'; and each in either side
Give the all-hail to thee, and cry 'Be blest'd
For making up this peace.'"

It would have been surprising, indeed, if the supreme genius of the race had been a lover of war, excepting in so far as it was a means of chastisement for brutality and tyranny.

Two thousand years ago the founder of Christianity was heralded as the Prince of Peace. For two thousand years his followers have been foretelling a golden time when swords should be broken into plowshares and spears into pruning-hooks. Theologians, philosophers and poets through the ages have been sounding the praises of peace, but public parks are still ornamented with canpon and the statues of warriors for the most part. The advocates of peace are looked upon as cranks and faddists. The school histories emphasize battle scenes and deeds of heroic warriors. Very good! But are not explorers who went into the wilderness bearing gifts to the savages as worthy of a high place in history as the soldiers who went with powder and ball?

Many years ago Gibbon wrote: "As long as mankind shall continue to bestow more liberal applause on their destroyers than on their benefactors, the thirst for military glory will be the vice of the most exalted." Educate the young less in the deeds of war than in the deeds of peace. The history of the pioneers in the forests of America, the deeds of life savers, the magnificent exploits of engineers by sea and land will develop character better than the accounts of slaughter and sufferings in war. "There never was a good war or a bad peace," said Benjamin Franklin. This is an extreme statement, no doubt occasioned by the horrors of the Revolutionary War. It is true, however, that the peacemakers are blessed, and are worthy to be called the sons of God.

THINKING PEOPLE

People are now beginning to realize that in order to secure perfect optical aid, something more is necessary than an examination in which are used a few Sight-Testing Charts.

Intelligent people know that skill, experience and care, directed according to a carefully planned system, are necessary in order that clear, safe and perfect vision may be absolutely assured.

Our system of Scientific Sight-Testing is the result of painstaking research. It reduces the possibilities of error to a minimum, ensures clearer vision for you and perfect fitting glasses that are guaranteed to give you the comfort sought. There is a proof of this in the fact that we can point to thousands of patients in this city and vicinity. The testimony of your town's people should appeal to you.

If we cannot help you, we say so. If we can, we do so thoroughly. This is one of the main principles which has gained for us confidence. Each and everyone we have fitted with glasses will testify to the care and skill exercised in their case, and the benefit they have received. They have found our methods to be the most reliable, and our treatment to give the utmost satisfaction.

Therein lies our Success.

Prices are entirely moderate.

By JACK LONDON

"What you think?" she asked Ornfari.

"Sheldon master big fella walk about along Sydney. Yes, me t'ink so. He finish along Berande."

All day the examination of the plantation and the discussion went on; and all day the skipper of the Malakula sent urgent messages ashore for the two men to hasten. It was not until sunset that they went down to the boat, and even then a final talk of nearly an hour took place on the beach. Sheldon was combating something—that she could plainly see; and that his two visitors were not giving in, she could also plainly see.

"What name?" she asked lightly, when Sheldon sat down to dinner.

He looked at her and smiled, but it was a very wan and wistful smile.

"My word," she went on. "One big fella talk. Sun he go down—talk-talk; sun he come up—talk-talk; all the time talk-talk. What name that fella talktalk?"

"Oh, nothing much." He shrugged his shoulders. "They were trying to buy Berande, that was all."

She looked at him challengingly.

"It must have been more than that. It was you who wanted to sell.'

"Indeed, no, Miss Lackland; I assure you that I am far from desiring to sell."

"Don't let us fence about it," she urged. "Let it be straight talk between us. You're in trouble. I'm not a fool. Tell me. Besides, I may be able to help, to — to suggest something."

In the pause that followed, he seemed to debate, not so much whether he would tell her, as how to begin to tell her.

"I'm American, you see," she persisted, "and our American heritage is a large parcel of business sense. I don't like it myself, but I know I've got it — at least more than you have. Let us talk it over and find a way out. How much do you owe?"

"A thousand pounds, and a few trifles over—small bills, you know. Then, too, thirty of the boys finish their time next week, and their balances will average ten pounds each. But what is the need of bothering your head with it? Really, you know —"

"What is Berande worth?—right now?"

"Whatever Morgan and Raff are willing to pay for it." A glance at her hurt expression decided him. "Hughie and I have sunk eight thousand pounds in it, and our time. It is a good property, and worth more than that. But it has three years to run before its returns begin to come in. That is why Hughie and I engaged in trading and recruiting. The Jessie and our stations came very near to paying the running expenses of Berande."

"And Morgan and Raff offered you what?"

"A thousand pounds clear, after paying all bills."

"The thieves!" she cried.

"No, they're good business men, that is all. As they told me, a thing is worth no more than one is willing to pay or to receive."

"And how much do you need to carry on Berande for three years?" Joan hurried on.

"Two hundred boys at six pounds a year means thirty-six hundred pounds — that's the main item."

"My! how cheap labour does mount up! Thirty-six hundred pounds, eighteen thousand dollars, just for a lot of cannibals! Yet, the place is good security. You could go down to Sydney and raise the money."

He shook his head.

You can't get them to look at plantations down there. They've been taken in too often. But I do hate to give the place up—more for Hughie's sake, I swear, than my own. He was bound up in it. You see, he was a persistent chap, and hated to acknowledge defeat. It—it makes me uncomfortable to think of it myself. We were running slowly behind, but with the Jessie we hoped to muddle through in some fashion."

"You were muddlers, the pair of you, without doubt. But you needn't sell to Morgan and Raff. I shall go down to Sydney in the next steamer and I'll come back in a second-hand schooner. I should be able to buy one for five or six thousand dollars—"

He held up his hand in protest, but she waved it aside.

I may manage to freight a cargo back as well. At any rate, the schooner will take over the Jessie's business. You can make your arrangements accordingly, and have plenty of work for her when I get back. I am going to become a partner in Berande to the extent of my bag of sovereigns—I've got over fifteen hundred of them, you know. We'll draw up an agreement right now—that is, with your permission, and I know you won't refuse it."

He looked at her with good-ntured amusement.

"You know I sailed here all the way from Tahiti in order to become a planter," she insisted. "You know what my plans were. Now, I've changed them, that's all. I'd rather be a part owner of Berande and get my returns in three years, than break ground on Pari-Sulay and wait seven years."

"And this—er—this schooner—" Sheldon changed his mind and stopped.

—"Yes, go on."

"You won't be angry?" he queried.

"No, no, this is business. Go on."

"You—er—you would run her yourself? — be the captain, in short?—and go recruiting on Malaita?"

"Certainly. We would save the cost of a skipper. Under an agreement you would be credited with a manager's salary, and I with a captain's. It's quite simple. Besides, if you won't let me be your partner, I shall buy Pari-Sulay, get a much smaller vessel, and run her myself. So what is the difference?"

"The difference? — why, all the difference in the world. In the case of Pari-Sulay you would be on an independent venture. You could turn cannibal for all I could interfere in the matter. But on Berande, you would be my partner, and then I would be responsible. And of course I couldn't permit you, as my partner to be skipper of a recruiter. I tell you, the thing is what I would not permit any sister or wife of mine—"

"But I'm not going to be your wife, thank goodness—only your partner."

"Besides, it's all ridiculous," he held on steadily. "Think of the situation. A man and a woman, both young, partners on an isolated plantation. Why, the only practical way out would be that I'd have to marry you—"

"Mine was a business proposition, not a marriage proposal," she interrupted, coldly angry. "I wonder if somewhere in this world there is one man who could accept me for a comrade."

"But you are a woman just the same," he began, "and there are certain conventions, certain decencies —"

She sprang up and stamped her foot.

"Do you know what I'd like to say?" she demanded.

"Yes," he smiled, "you'd like to say, 'Damn petticoats!'"

She nodded her head ruefully.

"That's what I wanted to say, but it sounds different on your lips. It sounds as though you meant it yourself, and that you meant it because of me.

"Well, I am going to bed. But do, please, think over my proposition, and let me know in the morning. There's no use in my discussing it now. You make me so angry. You are cowardly, you know, and very egotistic. You are afraid of what other fools will say. No matter how honest your motives, if others criticised your actions, your feelings would be hurt. And you think more about your own wretched feelings than you do about mine. And then, being a coward—all men are at heart cowards—you disguise your cowardice by calling it chivalry. I thank heaven that I was not born a man. Good night. Do think it over. And don't be foolish. What Berande needs is good American hustle. You don't know what this is. You are a muddler. Besides, you are enervated. I'm fresh to the climate. Let me be your partner, and you'll see me rattle the dry bones of the Solomons. Confess, I've rattled yours already."

"I should say so," he answered. "Really, you know, you have. I never received such a dressing-down in my life. If any one had ever told me that I'd be a party even to the present situation— Yes, I confess, you have rattled my dry bones pretty considerably."

"But that is nothing to the rattling they are going to get," she assured him, as he rose and took her hand. "Good night. And do, do give me a rational decision in the morning."

CHAPTER VIII.

THE LOGIC OF YOUTH

"I wish I knew whether you are merely headstrong, or whether you really intend to be a Solomon planter," Sheldon said, in tthe morning at breakfast.

"I wish you were more adaptable," Joan retorted. "You have more preconceived notions than any man I ever met. Why in the name of common-sense, in the name of—fair play, can't you get it into your head that I am different from the women you have known and treat me accordingly? You surely ought to know I am different. I sailed my own schooner here—skipper, if you please. I came here to make my living. You know that; I've told you often enough. It was Dad's plan, and I'm carrying out your Hughie's plan. Dad started to sail and sail until he could find the proper islands for planting. He died, and I sailed and sailed until I arrived here. Well," she shrugged her shoulders, "the schooner is at the bottom of the sea; I can't sail any farther; therefore I remain here. And a planter I shall certainly be."

"You see," he began.

"I haven't got to the point," she interrupted. "Looking back on my conduct from the moment I first set foot on your beach, I can see no false pretence that I have made about myself or my intentions. I was my natural self to you from the first. I told you my plans. And yet you sit there and calmly tell me that you don't know whether I really intend to become a planter, or whether it is all obstinacy and pretence. Now let me assure you, for the last time, that I really and truly shall become a planter, thanks to you, or in spite of you. Do you want me for a partner?"

"But do you realise that I would be looked upon as the most foolish jackanapes in the South Seas if I took a young girl like you in with me here on Berande?" he asked.

"No; decidedly not. But there you are again, worrying about what idiots and the generally evil-minded will think of you. I should have thought you had learned self-reliance on Berande instead of needing to lean upon the moral support of every whiskey-guzzling worthless South Sea vagabond."

He smiled and said:

"Yes, that is the worst of it. You are unanswerable. Yours is the logic of youth, and no man can answer that. The facts of life can, but they have no place in the logic of youth. Youth must try to live according to its logic. That is the only way to learn better."

"There is no harm in trying?" she interjected.

"But there is. That is the very point. The facts always smash youth's logic, and they usually smash youth's heart, too. It's like platonic friendships and—and all such things; they are all right in theory, but they won't work in practice. I used to believe in such things once. That is why I am here in the Solomons at present."

Joan was impatient. He saw that she could not understand. Life was too clearly simple to her. It was only the youth who was arguing with him, the youth with youth's pure-minded and invincible reasoning. He looked at her flushed, eager face, at the great ropes of hair coiled on the small head, at hte rounded lines of the figure showing plainly through the home-made gown, and at the eyes, boy's eyes, under cool, level brows—and he wondered why a being that was so much beautiful woman should be no woman a tall. Why in the deuce was she not carroty-haired, or cross-eyed, or hare-lipped?

"Suppose we do become partners on Berande," he said, at the same time experiencing a feeling of fright at the prospect that was tangled with a contradictory feeling of charm; "either I'll fall in love with you, or you with me. Propinquity is dangerous, you know. In fact, it is propinquity that usually gives the facer to the logic."

"If you think I came to the Solomons to get married," she began wrathfully. "Well, there are better men in Hawaii, that's all. Really, you know, the way you harp on that one string would lead an unprejudiced listener to conclude that you are prurient-minded—"

She stopped, appalled. His face had gone red and white with such abruptness as to startle her. He was patently very angry. She sipped the last of her coffee, and arose, saying:

"I'll wait until you are in a better temper before taking up the discussion again. That is what's the matter with you. You get angry too

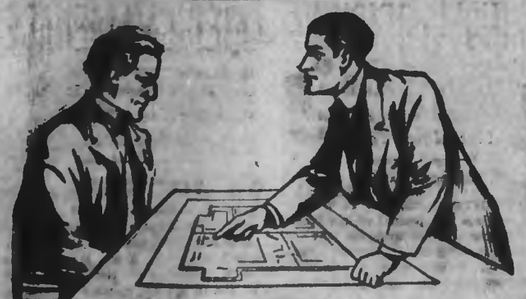
You cannot expect good work from a furnace unless it is properly installed.



You cannot buy a Furnace like you do a Stove—send it home and have the "Handy-Man" put it up—not if you expect to get all the heat out of your coal.

¶ Your heating system must be planned. The registers must be properly placed. The warm and cold air ducts must be a certain size. The furnace must be located in just the right spot—and it must be just the right size. ¶ We supply plans to you absolutely free and you do not need to buy a furnace to get them either.

¶ If you have a heating problem to solve—new building or old—send us a rough diagram of your building, showing the location of doors and windows. ¶ We will prepare for you complete plans and specifications for heating that building, give you an estimate of the cost of the heating system, and also the advice of our experts on every detail.

The plan is essential, but it is also essential to have a furnace that will give you ample heat—one that will supply pure, fresh air without a taint of gas, and, for the lady of the house, heat that will be free from dust and smoke.

The "Hecla" is such a furnace.

easily. Will you come swimming? The tide is just right."

"If she were a man, I'd bundle her off the plantation, root and crop, whale-boat, Tahitian sailors, sovereigns, and all," he said to himself after she had left the room.

But that was the trouble. She was not a man, and where would she go, and what would happen to her?

He got to his feet, lighted a cigarette, and her Stetson hat, hanging on the wall over her revolver-belt, caught his eye. That was the devil of it, too. He did not want her to go. After all, she had not grown up yet. That was why her logic hurt. It was only the logic of youth, but it could hurt damnably at times. At any rate, he would resolve upon one thing; never again would he lose his temper with her. She was a child: he must remember that. He sighed heavily. But why in reasonableness had such a child been incorporated in such a woman's form?

And as he continued to stare at her hat and think, the hurt he had received passed away, and he found himself cudgeling his brains for some way out of the muddle—for some method by which she could remain on Berande. A chaperon! Why not? He could send to Sydney on the first steamer for one. He could—

Her trailing laughter smote upon his revery, and he stepped to the screen door, through which he could see her running down the path to the beach. At her heels ran two of her sailors, Papehara and Mahameme, in scarlet lava-lavas, with naked sheath-knives gleaming in their belts. It was another sample of her wilfulness. Despite entreaties and commands, and warnings of the danger from sharks, she persisted in swimming at any and all times, and by special preference, it seemed to him, immediately after eating.

He watched her take the water, diving cleanly like a boy, from the end of the little pier; and he watched her strike out, with single overhead stroke, her henchmen swimming a dozen feet away on either side. He did not have much faith in their ability to beat off a hungry man-eater, though he did believe, implicitly, that their lives would go bravely before hers in case of an attack.

Straight out they swam, their heads growing smaller and smaller. There was a slight restless heave to the sea, and soon the three heads were disappearing behind it with greater frequency. He strained his eyes to keep them in sight, and finally fetched the telescope on to the veranda. A squall was mawking over from the direction of Florida; but then, she and her men laughed at squalls and the white choppy sea at such times. She certainly could swim, he had long since concluded. That came of her training in Hawaii. But sharks were sharks, and he had known of more than one good swimmer drowned in a tide-rip.

The squall blackened the sky, beat the ocean white where he had last seen the three heads, and then blotted out sea and sky and everything with its deluge of rain. It passed on, and Berande emerged from the sea. Sheldon slipped inside with the telescope, and through the screen door watched her run up the path, shaking down her hair as she ran, to the fresh-water shower under the house.

On the veranda, that afternoon, he you to get another chaperon to chaperon as delicately as he could, explaining the necessity at Berande for such a body, a housekeeper to run the boys and the store-room, and perform divers other useful functions. When he had finished, he waited anxiously for what Joan would say.

"Then you don't like the way I've been managing the house?" was her first objection. And next, brushing his attempted explanations aside: "One of two things would happen. Either I should cancel our partnership agreement and go away, leaving you to gett another chaperon to chaperon your chaperon; or else I'd take the old hen out in the whale-boat and drown her. Do you imagine for one moment that I sailed my schooner down here to this raw edge of the earth in order to put myself under a chaperon?"

"But, really—er—you know—a chaperon is a necessary evil," he objected.

"We've got along very nicely so far without one. Did I have one on the Miele? And yet I was the only woman on board. There are only three things I am afraid of: bumble-bees, scarlet fever and chaperons. Ugh!—the clucking, evil-minded monsters, finding wrong in everything, seeing sin in the most innocent actions, and suggesting sin—yes, causing sin, by their diseased imaginings."

"Phew!" Sheldon leaned back from the table in mock fear.

"You needn't worry about your bread and butter," he ventured. "If you fail at planting, you would be sure to succeed as a writer—novels with a purpose, you know."

"I didn't think there were persons in the Solomons who needed such books," she retaliated. "But you are certainly one—you and your custodians of virtue."

He winced, but Joan rattled on with the platitudinous originality of youth.

"As if anything good were worth while when it has to be guarded and put in leg-irons and handcuffs in order to keep it good. Your desire for a chaperon as much as implies that I am that sort of a creature. I prefer to be good because it is good to be good, rather than because I can't be bad because some argus-eyed old frump won't let me have a chance to be bad."

"But it—it is not that," he put in. "It is what others will think."

"Let them think, the nasty-minded wretches! It is because men like you are afraid of the nasty-minded that you allow their opinions to rule you."

"I am afraid you are a female Shelley," he replied. "And as such, you really drive me to become your partner in order to protect you."

"If you take me as a partner in order to protect me—I—I shan't be your partner, that's all. You'll drive me into buying Pari-Sulay yet."

"All the more reason—" he attempted.

"Do you know what I'll do?" she demanded. "I'll find some man in the Solomons who won't want to protect me."

Sheldon could not conceal the shock her words gave him.

"You don't mean that, you know," he pleaded.

"I do; I really do. I am sick and tired of this protectron dodge. Don't forget for a moment that I am perfectly able to take care of myself. Besides, I have eight of the best protectors in the world—my sailors."

"You should have lived a thousand years ago," he laughed, "or a thousand years hence. You are very primitive and equally super-modern. The twentieth century is no place for you."

"But the Solomon Islands are. You were living like a savage when I came along, and found you—eating nothing but tinned meat and scones that would have ruined the digestion of a camel. Anyway, I've remedied that, and since we are to be partners, it will stay remedied. You won't die of malnutrition, be sure of that."

"If we enter into partnership," he announced, "it must be thoroughly understood that you are not allowed to run the schooner. You can go down to Sydney and buy her, but a skipper we must have—"

"At so much additional expense, and most likely a whiskey-drinking, irresponsible, and incapable man to boot. Besides, I'd have he business more at heart than anyp man we could hire. As for capability, I tell you I can sail all around the average broken captain or promoted able seaman you find in the South Seas. And you know I am a navigator."

"But being my partner," he said, coolly, "makes you none the less a lady."

"Thank you for telling me that my contemplated conduct is unladylike."

She arose, tears of anger and mortification in her eyes, and went over to the phonograph.

"I wonder if all men are as ridiculous as you?" she said.

He shrugged his shoulders and smiled. Discussion was useless—he had learned that; and he was resolved to keep his temper. And before the day was out, she capitulated. She was to go to Sydney on the first steamer, purchase the schooner, and sail back with an Island skipper on board. And then she inveigled Sheldon into agreeing that she could take occasional cruises in the islands, though he was adamant when it came to a recruiting trip on Malaita. That was the one thing barred.

And after it was all over, and a terse and businesslike agreement (by her urging) drawn up and signed, Sheldon paced up and down for a full hour, meditating upon how many different kinds of a fool he had made of himself. It was an impossible situation, and yet no more impossible than the previous one, and no more impossible than the one that would have obtained had she gone off on her own and bought Pari-Sulay. He had never seen a more independent woman who stood more in need of a protector than this boy-minded girl who had landed on his beach with eight picturesque savages, a long-barrelled revolver, a bag of gold, and a gaudy merchandise of imagined romance and adventure.

ROYAL IRISH HOME ✿ ONE WAY TO GET INTO THE BEST SOCIETY

Ireland, Scotland, Wales Won by Their Monarchs

Human, Sympathetic Attitude of King George and Queen Mary, Particularly in Dublin, Makes a Vivid and Lasting Impression on Even the Lowliest of Their Subjects.

THE TACT OF THE DUCHESS OF CONNAUGHT

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday

NOW that Ireland's "cead mile failthe," straight from the warm hearts of the Celts, Wales' homage offered in raucous sounding consonants, and bunny Scotland's ringing cheers from Highlanders and Lowlanders alike, the pleasant memories to King George and Queen Mary, the newspapers of the United Kingdom are as one in declaring that from the day on which the monarchs were crowned in old Westminster Abbey the King, by his unfailing tact, and the Queen, through her womanly kindness and consideration, have won their way into the hearts of all their subjects with a celerity that seems marvellous when one reflects upon the coldness with which their names were received only a short six months ago.

The magnificent special correspondents in Dublin vividly portrayed the tumultuous welcome of the Irish, but the Irish are always enthusiastic, and when the cheers died away soon would have forgotten all about the memorable visit, were it not for the human, sympathetic attitude of the royal visitors, who repaid cordiality in kind and then thrilled the heartstrings of the Celts by their deep consideration for the poor and their earnest and manifest desire to better the condition of the lowly.

When King William, Queen Victoria and King Edward visited Ireland, they too were welcomed with noisy hurrahs from the mob and loyal, though more reserved, greetings from the nobility and gentry, but they found no permanent lodgment in the hearts of the people. When they left the pageant became a bit of history, that's all.

King George, though he lacks in a degree the magnetism that was one of the most alluring qualities of the make-up of his late father, thawed visibly as he realized the intensity of the enthusiasm of the poorest of the poor in the terrible slums which are situated in the centre of Dublin.

He might ride into that wretched quarter made a deep and lasting impression upon him. So keenly was he touched by the misery that was manifest among the army of tatterdemalions, who exhorted God to "save" him, that he called upon his gracious Queen to follow in his footsteps that she might realize, too, the depth of suffering among the poor in the heart of their Irish capital.

The fruit born of these remarkable visits is the announcement by the King, speaking for himself and Queen Mary, that they would devote themselves during their reign to the uplifting of the downtrodden. That's why the new King and Queen can counteract the Irish. True, the nationalists may continue to uphold or upset British governments, but they will not be able to loosen the hold of the Throne upon the Irish people if the sovereigns continue the benign policy of visiting the ill and comforting the afflicted among the millions who look to them for aid.

Of course, the monarchs visited the Leopardstown races, and joined with the Irish, who dote upon a horse race or a "shindy," in the enjoyment of the sport of kings But the glorious day at Leopardstown was a mere incident of the royal visit; the major portion of the time was devoted to inspections of hospitals, almshouses and the habitats of the poor.

There was a court at Dublin Castle attended by brave looking, gold bedizened lords and by beautiful ladies, in a land where nearly all womankind is beautiful; there was a great garden party, in which the dresses worn by the women rivalled the splendors of Ascot day, and there were other brilliant functions at which the brilliant uniforms of the men, the magnificent dresses of the women, gleaming coronets and sparkling gems made the beholder think he was in fairyland. The King and Queen were present at all of these, but manifested little interest in the passing show. Their hearts were touched only when they saw the park in the slums given by Lord Iveagh as a breathing spot for unfortunates; when they dedicated the dispensary for consumptives which is a memorial of the bounty of the late Peter Fenelon Collier, of New York, and when they accepted the princely gift of $250,000 from "Iveagh, of Elum Park," to extend free hospital work among the poor.

That's why King George and Queen Mary are loved in the Green Isle, and when the mind pictures of madly cheering thousands, of dashing, soldierly displays and of brilliant entertainments of the elect have faded, their Majesties' work for the poor will be the sweetest memory of their visit to the Irish.

Naturally you have read of the impressing ceremonies at the investiture of the Prince of Wales in grim, old Carnarvon Castle, where the national anthem and the war songs of the land of Lloyd George sung in the native tongue inspired wonder that a people capable of using consolidated consonants with such deadly effect ever could have been subjugated. Here, too, the King and Queen left behind them golden opinions among a proud, pleased people.

And then came the wonderful trip to Scotland, where the folk were just as lavish as the Irish with their cheers and just as loyal as the Welsh, for while Wales boasts that it gave England a Prince, Scotland knows that it supplied a line of Kings to the solemn looking people over the Berwick border.

And now their Majesties, thoroughly fatigued by the exhausting work which they have performed, will perhaps enjoy a well earned rest before proceeding to India for the great durbar. The Duke of Connaught, who has more than borne his share of the burden of post-coronation labors, will prepare for the assumption of the great office of Governor General of Canada, once filled by the present Duke of Argyll, when, as the Marquis of Lorne and assisted by his charming wife, Her Royal Highness the Princess Louise, he established a court in the capital of Our Lady of the Snows, which was the magnet for hundreds of the socially ambitious in New York, Washington, Philadelphia and other centres of republican simplicity.

The Duke of Connaught, like his nephew, the King, is a tactful, farseeing man, and can be counted upon to cement more firmly the sympathetic links that bind the Dominion to the motherland. The Duchess as a hostess is sincerely admired by all who have had the privilege of meeting her, and she will be assisted at Government House by Princess Patricia, who is as popular as she is pretty, and praise can go no further. So it is apparent that the Canadian capital will be the scene of brilliant social activities, and that there will be many visitors to Ottawa this winter.

INSURE-AT LLOYD'S AGAINST ELECTION

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

WHATEVER the cause, there is quite a rush to insure at Lloyd's against the risk of an early general election. Only two months ago underwriters regarded the possibility of this event as so remote that they issued policies at one per cent.

Within the last fortnight, however, the premium has advanced to twenty-five per cent, covering the contingency till the end of the year, while on policies insuring against a general election before December 31, 1912, the rate is fifty guineas per cent. In this connection, however, it has to be remembered that opinion in the "room" is overwhelmingly conservative, and no doubt this to a large extent affects the business.

Some five weeks ago five per cent was accepted to cover the payment of a claim should Mr. Lloyd George become Prime Minister on or before December 31 next. There is also an uneasy feeling that affairs in Portugal are not so satisfactory as is believed, and there has been a large number of inquiries from firms in Lisbon and Oporto for rates to insure the risk of damage by riot or civil commotion.

HOW THE CLIMBERS BUY INTO SOCIETY

"Cash at the Door" is the Inflexible Rule Adopted by the "Old Nobility."

BRITONS, THEY PAY, TOO

Even a Writer in "M. A. P." is Fair Enough to Admit That Not All Purchasers Are Americans.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

ONCE more the old subject of Americans paying to get into English society is revived, and the naive thing in connection with this revival is the frank admission that the members of our "Old Nobility" accept the cash.

"M. A. P." adverting to this always interesting if sandwhat threadbare subject, discloses that recently "an American lady actually wrote to a countess offering her the sum of £100,000 if she would include her in the house party she was gathering together to meet a royal personage at her place in the country. When she wrote the letter containing the offer she had no idea that the person she was addressing was very short of cash, but it so happened that such was the case, and in the end the American lady achieved her desire.

"Fortunately she was a desirable person socially or the consequences might have been serious for her hostess. As it happened, the royal personage—who was always partial to the American colony in London—took her up, and the purchased invitation to Blank Castle resulted in the daring American eventually entertaining royalty at her own house in London."

NOT ALL AMERICANS.

The writer of the screed is fair enough, however, to admit that it is quite erroneous to believe that all the "climbers" come from America. He says that, with the rise to vast wealth of some of the English middle class, they are overcome with a desire to shine in high society, and that many a young lady whose name is a household word as the result of her father's bank account entered the portals of the elect only after paying for her ticket at the door.

The present year the professional aristocratic chaperon has had a very busy and consequently very profitable season, but the "climbers" don't mind the expense—they have had "the time of their lives." It is asserted that one can get a foothold in the smart set by the payment of a fee ranging from $50,000 to $250,000 to the Baroness "de Sheet" or Lady "Need the Money," but the best and surest method of breaking down the barriers is via the charity road. There are some ladies who move in the best circles to-day who, according to "M. A. P.," specialize in charity. They are the first to suggest theatrical performances or hospital bazaars, and have cultivated a nodding acquaintance with royalties as a result of extensive correspondence, asking for their patronage. As for the so-called "big-wigs of society," they can always be induced to take and eat an "omelette," and so the rest is easy.

THE CHARITY DODGE.

Several instances are cited to show how the charity dodge is worked by some of these hangers-on to procure a position in society. Some time ago there was a bazaar and fete on behalf of a big metropolitan charity. Beauty came, duchesses assisted and many generous bought things. The balance sheet read:—Receipts, £1,250; expenses, £1,000. The promoters had dressed themselves at the expense of the bazaar, and the ostensible beneficiary received £50.

Those in the know are still laughing over the exploit of an ingenious old man who, living on about £300 a year, suddenly became smitten with the idea that it was his duty to become acquainted with the nobility. Accordingly he wrote to an institution patronized by a member of the royal house, offering to give £10,000 if four other persons could be induced to give a like sum within sixty days.

He was sent for and thanked by the royal personage and the others of the nobility who were on the Board of Directors. After very hard work the management succeeded in obtaining the £40,000, and then asked the old boy to forward his contribution. He replied briefly that he had never seen that much money in his life, and that, instead of damning him, the management ought to send him a percentage of the sum received as a result of his clever idea.

Of course there are many here who indulge in charity for its own sweet sake, but the "climbers" have found it to be the open sesame not only to society but to the coveted accolade. The reward, of course, is in recognition of generosity, the motive behind it being unknown.

CHURCH DISCUSSES SUICIDE BURIAL

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

THE question of the burial of suicides, with or without the full rites of the Church of England, has been occupying the attention of the Upper House of Convocation of Canterbury, the reason being that it had been represented to in from many quarters that the cause for the alarming increase of suicides in recent years was due to a widespread belief that burial with full rites of the Church was not likely to be withheld in any case in which the verdict of fele-de-se was not given.

It is not the case that the bodies of suicides have hitherto been taken into the Church en all occasions. It being left very much to the discretion of the officiating clergymen to act as they thought fit, but the Bishops have now declared that it is desirable to permit the bodies of suicides to have the burial service read over them in Church before being committed to the grave, with certain deletions from the service, except in any case in which a clergyman may be compelled to believe that serious harm may result in the parish, in which case he shall bring the matter before the Bishop of the diocese, and be guided by his judgment."

Mrs. Maldwin Drummond as London Hostess Delights

Generally Conceded That Her Ball in Carlton House Terrace Was One of the Most Brilliant and Enjoyable of the Season That Has Just Drawn to Its Close.

MANY AMERICANS ARE AMONG THE GUESTS

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

IT is generally conceded that one of the most enjoyable and interesting social events of the season was the ball given by Mrs. Maldwin Drummond, in which she made her re-entry into London society after an interval of several years.

Her house in Carlton House terrace, with its painted ceilings and walls and fine outlook on both sides, one over the Mall and the other over the green of Carlton Gardens, is really beautiful. The sultry night made the open balconies welcome retreats from the heat of the ballroom, which, however, was much cooler than might have been expected. Mrs. Drummond looked very handsome in a dress of apple green brocade, and entertained before the dance a very choice dinner party for young persons.

Among many American guests were Mrs. Ritchie, in shimmering white; Mrs. Newhouse, with a pretty arrangement for the hair, a fillet of turquoises edged with diamonds; Mme. Demingues, in mauve satin and high diamond crown; Lady Alastair Innes-Ker, in a picture dress of black chiffon, and Mrs. Charles Coventry, very picturesque in white, veiled in rose chiffon and her hair à la Grecque and bound in diamonds. Lady Haring was one of the most popular women there, and wore emerald green satin, while Lady Winifred Renshaw wore an Oriental-like dress of embroidered yellow.

Mrs. Bradley Martin's annual concert at Chesterfield Gardens was another well attended event, nearly every one who was invited coming and crowding the rooms of her beautiful house. Signor Mammarco sang, and several of the Russian ballet came from Covent Garden. Before the concert Mr. and Mrs. Bradley Martin gave a dinner at which, besides Lord and Lady Craven, there were present, among others, Lord and Lady Dufferin, the Duchess Dowager of Roxburghe, Lord and Lady Clarendon, Lady Yarborough, Lord and Lady Arlington, Lord and Lady Cockville, Sir Frederick and Lady Ponsonby, Mr. Sidney Greville, Mrs. Ronald Greville, Lady Paget, Lady Naylor Leyland, Mrs. Hope Vere, Mrs. Bischoffsheim and Mme. Waddington.

READY TO WELCOME SPAIN'S MONARCHS

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

OSBORNE COTTAGE has been made spick and span for the arrival of the King and Queen of Spain, who are due at Cowes for the regatta. King Alfonso will bring with him three yachts to take part in the events.

The Sheila, Princess Henry of Battenberg's well known yacht, was overhauled recently and redecorated, for Queen Victoria Eugenie, who loves the water, spends much time on board her mother's yacht when she comes to Cowes. The Prince of the Asturias, Prince Jaime and Princess Beatrice, with their nurses and governesses, will be with the royal party.

The staff will have to be put up in the town, as Osborne Cottage is by no means large.

King Alfonso's visit will not extend over nine or ten days, but the Queen and her children are to make a stay of some weeks. Later Queen Victoria comes to London to stop at Kensington Palace, where she has a suite of rooms of her own conferred on her by the late King Edward. As a matter of fact, however, Queen Victoria Eugenie prefers to stop at a bright West End hotel. Her forthcoming visit in the dull season is practically of a business nature, for she still does most of her shopping in London. Her hats especially are sent to her from a well known millinery house in the vicinity of Hanover square.

200 BITS OF SKIN SAVE WOMAN'S LIFE

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

SKIN grafting operations on a remarkable scale have resulted in the complete recovery of Mrs. Hawkey, a farmer's wife, living at Beauchamp Roding, in Essex, who was very badly burned about the arms and back, owing to some clothes she was cleaning with petrol becoming ignited.

"For months after the accident," said Mrs. Hawkey, in narrating her experience, "I lay in a very serious condition, and at the last the surgeons who attended me agreed that I needed a fresh supply of skin. The question as to where it should come from was settled immediately. Relatives and friends, regardless of the pain involved, vied with one another in being first to undergo the skin grafting operation."

So many friends underwent the operation for her sake that Mrs. Hawkey forgets exactly how many there were, but there must have been at least twenty.

"All displayed the utmost fortitude in their sufferings," said Mrs. Hawkey, "and the surgeons were astonished by so wonderful a demonstration of family loyalty and affection. Perhaps the greatest pluck, considering his age, was displayed by my little ten-year-old brother, who had a deep incision made in his arm. He refused to take an anaesthetic and bore his sufferings bravely. Altogether some two hundred pieces of skin were grafted onto me and the operations lasted over several months."

King and Queen Are Not Averse to a Royal Home in Ireland

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

Since the visit of the King and Queen to Ireland it has been said in court circles that they would welcome a project for establishing a royal residence in the Emerald Isle to enable them to spend two or three weeks there each year. An essential condition of such a project would be that it should be occupied only by members of the royal family and not be "lent" to the Lord Lieutenant or to any members of the Dublin Castle executive.

It is understood that Queen Mary would not be averse to an arrangement that would enable her to be for a period with her children at an Irish residence, as, for example, during the month of August between Cowes and the Balmoral season. Bearing in mind the period spent by the sovereign during the last two reigns in Continental visits, for which King George and Queen Mary have no predilection, there would be no difficulty in fitting an Irish season into the routine of normal years.

Lord and Lady Granard, who were much in evidence during the royal visit to Dublin, are now enjoying a vacation at Castle Forbes, County Longford, before returning to London. Lord and Lady Granard are very fond of their Irish home and are on terms of intimacy with every one in the neighborhood. Lady Granard won the hearts of her husband's tenants and employes directly she set foot at Castle Forbes.

Visitors who go to Castle Forbes ask to be shown the mausoleum in the grounds, in which Viscount Forbes, son of the sixth earl, is buried. He was once saved from death by his dog, who dragged him into safety when half suffocated by a fire at the castle. The Granard family are Catholics and little Lady Moyra Forbes, who is about two years old, was christened with great state in London by the Archbishop of Westminster.

AMERICAN POULTRY 'KING' IS REIGNING

Story of the Plans, Hopes, Fears and Ambitions of Mons. Auguste Silze, of New York.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

"A DOZEN SILZE, New York." You will see this printed on the labels of grease proof wrappers that are to be used to carry one million birds, each frozen stiff, to hi whom the English newspapers refer as "Morton's Poultry King."

According to an English writer, Mons. Silze thinks of pheasants in thousands and of grouse in tens of thousands. A week or two ago, we are told, Mons. Silze stopped in London on his way to Paris, rang up some poulterers' agents and ordered a million birds. Just like that.

Mons. Silze will begin to receive the game of old England soon after the first guns have sounded on the moors in August. He will have to pay 7½d. customs duty on each bird, which means something more than £30,000, but the Napoleon of the game trade, according to this English informant, looks upon the sum as a mere bagatelle.

According to the story told here, Mons. Silze's visit is due to a short open season and a New York Game Commissioner who enforces the law to the last letter. To quote the words of this English writer:—

"It is no use telling a Cincinnati millionaire who dines at the Plaza or the Waldorf-Astoria that pheasants are 'off.' He must have his pheasant, and Mr. Silze is the man to see that he gets it. This autumn he will be telling New York that he has real British birds killed by real Lords on the moors of Scotland, and the hotel proprietors and restaurant managers will go to him as the Israelites went to Joseph when he manipulated the first and most successful grain trust. Opulent ladies from Ohio will toy with tasty legs offered by the pellets of Captain Crackshot, of the Guards, and—Mons. Silze will buy a larger cashbook and wonder where people get all the money he takes from them."

Notwithstanding this Silzean invasion, Gilson, the new Bond street poulterer, says London epicures need not lose their sleep worrying over penniless mons. The million birds in the cold storage rooms of the transatlantic craft consigned to "Mons. Silze of New York" will not affect prices here, as the shooting promises to be as good this year that we can afford to send five times as many birds to America and still have a few to spare.

PREPARE TO CROWN EMPEROR OF INDIA

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

The next great event for which King George and Queen Mary are preparing is, of course, the Indian durbar, and this week much of the equipment has been despatched, including the travelling and reception tents, which have been made after the model of, but more extensive than, those made for the Duke and Duchess of Connaught and Princess Patricia during their African tour. The King has given further commissions to certain jewelry firms for articles of various descriptions, with the royal monogram, to serve as presents while in India.

Delhi-Ke-Bashah is the title with which the King-Emperor will be hailed at the durbar. No official programme is yet ready, but the work of preparation is well advanced, and it is pretty all known what it will be like. It involves almost the reconstruction of the city—roads, railways and sanitation all being extensively improved.

King George will be the first of the English to be crowned Delhi-Ke-Bashah. He himself will perform the act of crowning, as no religious ceremony is possible in a land full of so many jarring creeds as is India. For King George and Queen Mary special crowns are being made at the crown jewellers. They will be of a characteristic Indian type and will be assumed by them with their own hands at the durbar on December 12.

The King and Queen will be in Delhi from December 7 to December 16. The King then leaves for a shooting expedition to Nepaul, when he will be the guest in a shooting camp of the Maharajah, the Queen remaining at Agra.

Among the ceremonies fixed is a state entry into Delhi, presentation of the inevitable addresses and the reception of several thousand Indians in a pavilion on the historic ridge where the British camp was during the mutiny days.

Two days are set apart for visits from the ruling chiefs, the King being anxious to come into personal touch with them, and for these two days he will do nothing else than converse with the rulers of native India. This is looked upon as a stroke of very wise policy, due entirely to the King's comprehension of the Indian problem, in which he is known to have taken a deep interest, and it is considered that it will make permanent the good effects of his visit to India. The King will not return the visits, in that respect his place being taken by Lord Hardinge, who, when the King steps ashore at Bombay, ceases to be Viceroy and becomes simply the Governor General.

The durbar will be witnessed by at least fifty thousand persons. The scene is expected to be overwhelmingly splendid even to the Indian mind, which expects a great deal. There is to be another day a review of eighty thousand troops. Calcutta children will sing the national anthem in that city in four languages—English, Gujarati, Marathi and Urdu.

QUEEN MOTHER'S PLANS.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

Queen Alexandra has let it become known to her friends that she intends to prolong her period of mourning. She will not be seen at any theatres nor will she participate in any other gayeties for some months to come. She is, however, in very good health and is passing the time very quietly with her sister, the Empress Maria.

BENT ON FINDING AMERICAN MENACE

Tokio Mainichi Declares the Monroe Doctrine To Be Illogical in World Politics.

[By Special Despatch.]
Tokio, Saturday.

THAT the Japanese are bent upon discovering a menace in every move of American diplomacy finds almost daily demonstration. The Tokio Mainichi, for instance, writes that the rumor that Japan and Russia are working together to bring about a new status in Chinese affairs emanates steadily from the four quarters of the diplomatic world.

"While we are not in a position either to affirm or deny it," continues the article, "we know that the two Powers in question are obliged, with a view to maintaining the dignity of civilized nations, to take steps to prevent China's big loan from furnishing a pretext for intervention by the four creditor Powers, and that Russia and Japan have it in their power to protect themselves adequately against the intrigues of third parties to violate our interests in Manchuria.

"There is nothing so illogical as the Monroe Doctrine as applied in international politics, yet Washington appears to be ready to make any sacrifice in its desire to adhere to this doctrine. The report that Japan has tried to issue Magdalena Bay was a sheer fabrication, but the American government caused its journalistic organs to attack us violently and to paint us as something like a traitor to humanity.

"On the other hand, even if there had been any foundation for the report that Japan wished to lease the bay from Mexico, it would have been none of America's business, because the place is not within American territory.

"Seeing that America makes such a fuss over something which does not really concern her, why cannot Japan and Russia take concerted action in the face of a menace to their prestige in China? May, it is strange that they have not taken action at an earlier date.

"Maintenance of the status quo in the Far East is a great principle, and the Russo-Japanese convention is an attempt to guarantee it. In what, then, does the maintenance of the status quo consist? In naught else than the perfect observance of treaty stipulations between Japan, Russia and China in the Chinese Empire. In this way the sovereign rights of China will be preserved satisfactorily. Conversely, all the new enterprises that are likely to interfere with Japanese and Russian interests are a violation of the principle of the status quo. A case in point is the proposed Chinchow-Aigun railway. All in all, there is nothing that need prevent us from ignoring the movements of America and other Powers which seek to meddle with Manchurian affairs."

JAPAN LOOKS INTO FOOD'S HIGH PRICE

[Special Despatch.]
Tokio, Saturday.

CONSTANT rise in the cost of living in Japan is a theme now attracting the attention of the Department of Agriculture and Commerce. This department is making investigations into the prices of eggs, beef, fish, firewood, charcoal and other necessaries, as also the exact process by which these commodities reach the consumer from the producer. It is intended apparently to undertake measures for the improvement of business methods in order to effect a reduction in the retail prices of commodities in everyday use.

Incidentally it is stated that so far the department has come to the conclusion that the high standard prevailing in Japan as compared with foreign countries must be ascribed in part to the "lack of harmony between merchants and producers and to other evils." Independent foreign observers long ago satisfied themselves that high prices in this country are largely due to an exaggerated system of protection, bounties, subsidies and monopolies and to the vexatious incidence of the income and business taxes which compel retailers and wholesalers to charge high prices for their wares in order to cover those exceptional outlays which are actually tantamount to the penalization of enterprise.

In connection with the cost of living, which presses with exceptional severity upon the lower classes, it is interesting to note that the recent imperial gift of a million and a half yen for charitable objects has had the further effect of promoting the tentative organization of a special society, under the auspices of the Emperor, the imperial princes, the Premier, Ministers of State and others which will appropriate the interest on the donation as the nucleus of a fund to be reinforced by subscriptions, the sums to be devoted to relief work throughout the country. The society takes the form of a juridical person under the style in Japanese of the Onshi Zaidan Saisei-kwai, which literally means "the Imperial Munificence Foundation Life Relief Society."

It appears that the work contemplated by the new society will be divided into two parts, one being the establishment of hospitals and the other the distribution among the indigent of tickets entitling them to receive full medical treatment.

While the formation of such a society would excite scarcely any attention in Europe or America, in this country it may be said to mark an epoch, and is especially significant in the wake of the recent anarchist plot which seems to have roused the authorities to some realization of the fact that the gulf between the rich and the poor in Japan has been gradually widening, and that discontent among the masses is rife, even though it may be less articulate than in the West. In feudal days relief measures existed, but their practical application was not called for to any large extent, owing to the operation and enforcement of the family system. Nowadays, however, the latter is but laxly adhered to and the time is rife for the adoption of a benevolent plan such as this to divert the small sums now loosely disbursed by private individuals without careful inquiry as to the bona fide nature of particular cases into channels of real

By Ruth Cameron

"BUT if we go over on the boat what will we do about the carriage we ordered to call for us?"—First girl.

"We won't do anything. Just let him come up. We'll be gone before he gets here."—Second girl.

"But he'll charge us just the same."—Third girl.

"How can he if we are gone?"—Second girl.

"Of course he can't. And he always sends a little boy up and those little boys might just a well be riding around in a swing in the stable."—Third girl.

That is a conversation among three young girls which I overheard the other day.

Yes, actually. Of course I haven't it word for word, but that is the substance.

No, they were not ignorant, conscienceless creatures of whom you might expect anything at all.

On the contrary, they were well-bred, refined girls, college-educated and presumably in the habit of doing what they thought was right.

And yet only the decision not to go in the boat after all prevented them from cheerily carrying out the plan outlined in that conversation.

Isn't it extraordinary how often you will find similar examples of a complete lack of sense of business honour among well-bred and intelligent women.

The shampoo lady says that the worst of her patrons seem to think nothing of cancelling an appointment so late that it is impossible for her to sell her time elsewhere.

Dressmakers tell me that they very often lose a day's work in this way.

Everyone knows how women who do not want to buy and yet dislike to say "no" to the clerk will often have an article sent out C. O. D. or on aproval without the slightest intention of keeping it. If you told them they were morally stealing a sum equivalent to the expense of having the article wrapped and sent they would be very indignant. And yet they certainly are.

There are many kinds of thieves in the world. For instance, there is the poor shop-lifter who gets jailed for stealing twenty-five cents' worth of ribbon from a huge department store and there is the wealthy woman who isn't jailed for stealing one-sixth of her poor dressmaker's weekly income.

Am I too harsh?

Perhaps so. Perhaps the sex that has known so little about business for so many centuries cannot be blamed for not having a keener sense of business honour.

And yet—well, surely our sex has not been barred from a study of the Golden Rule, and it seems to me that an understanding of "As ye would that men should do to you" and a sense of business honour are pretty closely related.

THE FAMILY HEARTH

DELIHGTS FOR LUNCHEON HAMPER

Sandwiches in dainty packages, bound with paraffin paper are always en regle for the luncheon hamper. They should be varied, two or three kinds at least. Cheese, meat, egg, nuts, olives and lettuce with mayonnaise all make delicious mixtures if the bread is cut thin and daintily buttered. A glass fruit jar filled with salad is another refreshing viand on a warm day. It can be kept cool by being wrapped in a moist cloth, and just before luncheon, if the covering is again dampened and the jar placed in a draught, the contents will soon chill. Bottles of liquid refreshment can be cooled nicely in this manner, if there is no ice about.

Cakes and other sweets should be added judiciously to the luncheon hamper, while salted nuts, olives, pickles and other appetisers are always tasty.

Shelled nuts with raisins, prunes or figs are a great addition to the luncheon basket. These are much cleaner and better than cookies or candies, to munch along the road before the luncheon is served.

Of course you have included a cloth and napkins and the necessary cutlery in the hamper. Whether these shall be fine damask or tissue paper depends entirely upon your taste and pocketbook.

For a jolly jaunt into the woods or down to the sea, where it will add to your comfort to have nothing to carry back, a heavy paper hamper, with nicely packed edibles, will obviate the necessity of any return package.

If you are in a motor and have one of the perfectly equipped luncheon hampers now sold everywhere for automobile parties of course you will enjoy having the gay-colored luncheon cloths and serviettes to make the spread attractive when the hamper yields its contents by some brookside en route. Thermos bottles with tea or other drinkables, sandwiches and salad accompaniments of the motor hamper, and with the lid forming a portable table, the meal al fresco is one of the events of the trip.

TRIED RECIPES

SALAD FROM VEGETABLES

For this salad take left-over potatoes, cucumbers either fresh or pickled, pickled beets, ray onions, beans either shelled or string, and in fact any vegetables that one happens to have on hand. Cut these in uniform slices or dice as preferred. Season the fresh vegetables with a little salt. Then using the left-over vinegar from beet pickles make this dressing:

Place one and a half cupfuls of beet vinegar in a saucepan and heat. Into a tablespoonful of butter rub two teaspoonfuls of sugar, one teaspoonful each mustard and salt and two rounded teaspoonfuls of flour. When the vinegar is hot stir a few moments. When cold mix with the vegetables. This makes a pretty as well as delicious salad.

CELERY SOUP

Scald a quart of milk in double boiler and thicken with a half cup creamed with two tablespoonfuls of butter. Boil slowly for an hour, using the salted leaves, roots and tough stalks of root of celery. Take from fire and strain. There should be about a pint of the celery water. Add the milk. Have ready two eggs, hard boiled, mash the yolks and mix thoroughly with the soup. Cut the whites in rings and put in the soup. Season with salt and pepper.

A young girl will be far safer in the hands of a young man born of parents of moderate circumstances, honest in his principles, the energetic and industrious, than she would with a young man who has only known the luxuries of life, and to whom work is an incidental matter rather than the aim and purpose of life.

Home means comfort, but when we have it fixed up so elaborately that we must sit in the parlor or the back yard to genuinely enjoy ourselves then it is high time we made a change and turned out the too-good-to-use articles and substitute for them real homely things that we could enjoy every day of the year and every moment of the day.

The boy who looks upon his home as a place for the display of nervous irritation that comes from overwork, where everything is sacrificed to the love of show and no place is left for the angel of rest and peace, will leave it at his first opportunity, and at the same time his training has ill-fitted him to meet the great temptations outside.

Mother, young man, is the sweetest name in all the world and should be held in reverence by every boy. The time is coming when her feeble hands will be folded, her watchful eyes closed and the lips often warm with mother's love be cold, the fond heart whose anxious beatings once followed your wayward feet will be stilled forever. So while you can, tell her mother.

A Richibucto School Teacher

Once a Dyspeptic—Now Well, Thanks to Father Morrissey's No. 11.

Richibucto, N. B., Nov. 17th 1909. Father Morrissey Med. Co., Ltd.,

I have been teaching school for upwards of thirty years, during the last twenty-five of which I have suffered seriously with stomach trouble, indigestion and dyspepsia.

I have tried many remedies, and while I would get temporary relief from some of them, yet the old trouble would return, and with it the sufferings only known to the chronic dyspeptic.

Last year I had made up my mind to abandon my profession, feeling that in my condition I could neither do justice to myself or to the many pupils under my charge. A friend suggested to me that I try Father Morrissey's No. 11 Stomach Tablets; I did so, and have continued to use them with the result that my stomach trouble is cured—my indigestion and dyspepsia gone and I feel as well as I ever did.

I have, thanks to the Tablets, been able to continue in my profession, and feel that I am once more enjoying my work and am able to give justice to the fifty-four pupils under my care.

Yours Gratefully,
(Signed) MARY CHRYSTAL.

If you are you cannot do better than she did—take Father Morrissey's No. 11 Tablets.

Each No. 11 Tablet, when dissolved in the stomach, will digest 1¾ pounds of food—a good, hearty meal—so that no matter how weak your stomach may be No. 11 Tablets will enable you to get the nourishment out of your food and build up your strength, while the stomach, thus relieved, recovers its vigor.

50c. a box at your dealer's or from the Father Morrissey Medicine Co., Ltd., Montreal, Que.

GOLD IN SCOTLAND

The Precious Metal is Being Mined at Kildonan

Goldmining in Sutherlandshire has now begun with a will and the Duke of Sutherland's mining camp at Kildonan is in full swing. It is located near the Suisgill Burn, a typical Scottish stream flowing amidst wild and barren country, not unlike parts of South Africa in some respects. Mr. William Heath, who is an experienced Klondyke miner, is in charge of the search for gold, and he has under him a gang of seventeen laborers. It is hoped that the new industry will shortly employ a very large number of men, for work is badly wanted there. To house the miners two large tents have been put up, for there is no accommodation near the lonely stream where the gold is being found. One of the tents is used as a dining-room and the other as a dormitory. Amongst the equipment of the camp are a blacksmith's forge and a carpenter's shop, and the venture is being conducted in a serious, energetic and business-like way. The gravel in which the gold is found is being washed in sluices, and to facilitate this the burn has been dammed in two places in order to concentrate the flow of water and to obtain it in sufficient quantities. Several tons of gold-bearing gravel can now be washed each day, and those behind the project expect rich results.

FOUGHT WITH WILD DOGS

Nurse Who Ministered to Sick and Wounded in Two Continents

Soldiers have lost a valuable friend in Mrs. Janet Helen King (Sister Helen), who has just died in England.

On two continents Sister Janet had tenderly cared for sick and wounded soldiers. When only eighteen she entered the Protestant Deaconesses' Institution to be trained as a nurse for the sick and wounded in war, and was one of a party of nine sent out to assist in nursing the troops engaged in the war between Russia and Turkey.

Snow lay deep on the ground, the party lost its way, and the night was passed in the open carts, bitter cold and the howling of wolves effectively preventing sleep. Arriving at Vardin they found their services sorely needed, and for months the Sisters worked night and day.

To Sister Janet's care were allotted some two hundred patients who lay in huts scattered here and there amongst the hills. Daily as she trudged through the snow from hut to hut on her mission of mercy she was exposed to attacks from wild dogs which infested Bulgaria. More than once these brutes dragged her to the ground, but her stick and dagger protected her until her cries brought assistance. At the close of the war she received for her services the Imperial Order of the Red Cross of Russia.

She went out, too, to the Zulu War, and at Utrecht 3,200 sick and wounded passed through her hands. There she was personally thanked by Sir Garnet Wolseley. She was awarded the medal for the war, and received the Decoration of the Royal Red Cross from the Queen for "the special devotion and competency displayed in nursing duties with her Majesty's troops."

FOR VALOR

Various Methods by Which Nations Reward Great Bravery

As is well known, Britain decorates her soldiers with the Victoria Cross for conspicuous acts of bravery on the field of battle.

But most other countries have similar rewards for valor.

Germany is proud of her Iron Cross; while Austria confers her Ancient Order of Maria Theresa on her heroes. Russia distributes her Cross of St. Vladimir sparingly to her gallant soldiers.

Denmark has one of the most illustrious orders of chivalry, the Order of the Elephant, which ranks as high as our own Order of the Garter.

Sweden has her Noble Order of the Seraph, founded in 1220. This order is limited to twenty-three natives and eight foreigners.

Spain is justly proud of her Order of the Golden Fleece, which is, and has always been, most sparingly bestowed.

Italy decorates her most heroic warriors with her military Medal of Merit.

Portugal has the Tower and Sword, a very old order.

Sardinia has a medal for distinguished conduct on the field of battle, and a special military decoration besides for deeds of outstanding courage.

REFRIGERATOR WITHOUT ICE

How to Make a "Cooler" for Summer Use

A cooler can be made out of any box that has for its sides slats instead of solid boards. A peach crate makes a very satisfactory one. The box once chosen, all that is needed in the way of construction is to add as many shelves inside as desired, and a door on hinges. Then cover the door, sides and back with burlap or some similar material.

On the top place a pan, preferably enamel, and from this pan hang wicks made of strips of flannel four or five inches in width. These wicks should have one end resting on the inside bottom of the pan, and the other hanging over the edge of the crate and touching the burlap. Then fill the pan with water.

The cooler should be placed in a cool place, where the wind can blow upon it. The wicks absorb the water and distribute it through the mesh of the burlap by capillary attraction. The wind causes the moisture to evaporate, and the evaporation reduces the temperature inside the refrigerator. A writer in The Youth's ——, in describing such a cooler, asserts that it will keep butter hard and firm on the warmest days in summer. If this be true, as it probably is, surely the idea is one well worth trying.

Cured Awful Ringworm

"Well over four years ago my two little girls were taken with a dreadful scalp trouble that the doctors called ringworm. They attended the —— Hospital as out-patients for a year. I had to apply their ointment with a brush, giving the children frightful pain. I also had to have their heads shaved every two weeks, but they got no better under the treatment. They used to cry with the tormenting itching, and their heads were covered with a thick scurf and dandruff.

"About a year ago I determined to try the Cuticura Remedies. I used plenty of Cuticura Soap and applied the Cuticura Ointment. I used only about three cakes of Cuticura Soap and three boxes of Cuticura Ointment and they were cured. Their hair is growing long and nice again. They had become so ill after their three years of suffering that I had to send one away to a convalescents' home as soon as she was cured, but now she is home, well and strong. My younger girl was away from school nine months with the disease. I am very grateful to Cuticura and for their children's sake I hope other mothers will try it. The Cuticura Soap I will always use for it makes the hair so lovely."

HOW GLASS-MAKING BEGAN

The Phoenicians and Egyptians the Most Renowned Glass Makers

Glass-making dates from the earliest times, and originated, no doubt, with the Egyptians, as the oldest-known specimens found are those discovered in the tombs of Egypt, and the earliest mention dates back to 3,800 B.C.

Second to the Egyptians, the ancient people most renowned for the manufacture of glass were the Phoenicians.

The legend of that people concerning the discovery of the art is consistently retold. Some Phoenician traders, returning to their home in a ship laden with soda, were compelled to land on a sandy tract on the Syrian coast.

They built a fire on the sand to prepare their supper, and placed their cooking pots on a lump of soda. The sand and the soda were both melted by the heat of the fire, and, flowing together, formed a substance which, although they knew it not, the sailors recognized as valuable. Such, says tradition, is the origin of one of our most useful commodities.

MORE ABOUT MEANNESS

In the ranks of those who have reduced meanness to a fine art, women are to be found as well as men.

A lady, with an income of several hundreds a year, exercised so stringent an oversight in her household, that only one match was allowed to the servant for lighting the kitchen fire in the morning. Personal application was necessary before a second could be obtained.

Another lady, a wealthy member of society, was also persimoniously inclined.

One day she flashed into her milliner's, bringing with her a hat that had been altered a month previously, and had been worn since. She loudly demanded the attention of the manager, and inquired why it was that a different shade of trimming material had been used to that ordered.

It was a game of bluff, with the object of getting something for nothing.

Enterprising in her impudence was the young lady who walked into a banking office, examined the pens on the counter, and asked the cashier if he could let her have a clean one.

The cashier at once procured for her a new pen and nib. To his amazement, instead of dipping it in the inkwell, she proceeded to skewer her hat on with it; then walked out with a brief "Thanks!"

Cat Travelled 90 Miles

A few days ago Mr. H. Smith, formerly gardener to Sir H. Roberts, M.P., of Abergele, removed from Wales to Boothstown, near Leigh, taking with him a fine cat. Puss disappeared shortly afterwards, and was given up for lost. To the owner's surprise, however, information has just been received from Abergele that the cat has turned up at its old home, a distance of about ninety miles from Boothstown.

WELCOMED THE SULTAN

Extraordinary Demonstration in Honor of the Turkish Ruler

Contrary to the usual precautions taken by the Sultan in presenting himself to the populace, his return from an extensive continental tour was attended by only such police vigilance as was absolutely necessary to prevent accidents. The spectacle was one of the most extraordinary ever seen. From the early morning the weather was excellent, and an immense crowd, including many Turkish ladies, lined the quays of the Bosphorus from Galata to the Dolma Bagtshe Palace. On the Asiatic side of the Bosphorus the slopes of Scutari, and, in particular, the old Byzantine ramparts on the Sea of Marmora, were crowded with spectators, who had occupied every possible coigne of vantage, giving the city a mediaeval impression. The Bosphorus and the Sea of Marmora were filled with so many varieties of craft that river traffic became very difficult. At noon the fleet appeared on the horizon of the Sea of Marmora. It comprised the battleship Barbarossa, with the Sultan on board, and some forty other vessels, on which were various functionaries as an escort. As soon as the Imperial flag was seen, the batteries fired a salute, and this, with the cheers and the whistles of the steamers, formed an indescribable tumult. The battleship stopped in the Bosphorus in front of the Dolma Bagtshe Palace. In order to land, the Sultan entered the big Imperial ten-oared barge, and the police merely prevented private boats from getting in the way, but they were allowed to approach and almost touch the sides of the Sultan's barge. His Majesty was wearing a new blue uniform, with large gold epaulettes. Beside him was seated the Minister of Marine, Mahmud Mukhtar Pasha. The cheers and the shrieking of sirens made a deafening noise, the enthusiasm was indescribable, and many Turkish ladies wept. The evident goodness and simplicity of the Sultan made him universally popular, and in diplomatic circles it is considered that this popularity, which has greatly increased the prestige of the crown, is becoming a factor of extreme importance.

ADMIRAL TOGO

Who returned from London by way of the United States.

A DISGUISED VISITOR

A Prank that Was Played on Some Scotch Journalists

A good story is being told in Fleet Street at the expense of a party of Scotch journalists, who occasionally dine together and entertain a guest. They were asked to receive a distinguished Indian visitor. They declared themselves honored. The visitor's dignified bearing, his gorgeous apparel, and his gravity proclaimed him an Easterner of high caste. He was accompanied by a military man, who interpreted a speech which he delivered. To this speech one of the best known Scottish journalists in Fleet Street responded, expressing the sense of honor felt by the company. Then the visitor sang a plaintive native ditty, accompanying himself by tapping a straw hat. The company declared the performance most impressive. Then suddenly the distinguished visitor electrified his hosts by jumping to his feet and singing "I love a lassie," with a broad Scotch accent. The secret was out. The "Indian prince" was a Dundee artist disguised. The journalists were speechless with amazement for a few minutes, and then with quick wit turned the occasion to good account. They sent urgent messages to a number of their colleagues in the newspaper offices, and gravely introduced them to their guest. The laughter was loud and long as each new victim entered the room and was made to bow low in response to the grave salutations of the gorgeous stranger.

BY-LAWS DID NOT MEET WITH THE APPROVAL OF RATEPAYERS YESTERDAY

All Were Lost, the Park By-law by 196—Vote Was Very Small and Little Interest Seemed to be Taken in the Measures.

GENERAL APATHY

The ratepayers did not deal very kindly with the by-laws submitted to them yesterday, and all three of the measures went down to defeat at the hands of a small representation of those entitled to vote. General apathy was shown in the fate of the by-laws and not quite six hundred ratepayers took the trouble to go to the polls and express an opinion as to their merits. The Park by-law, which only required a majority to carry it, was lost by a vote of 390 to 594, a majority of 198 against it, while the by-laws to fix the assessments of the Peterborough Lock Manufacturing Company and the B. F. Ackerman, Son and Company, in which a vote of three-fifths of the vote polled was required, did not get a majority at all, the first being turned down by 304 to 295, an adverse majority of 9, and the latter by 316 to 281, a majority against of 35.

The by-laws could not have been submitted at a more unsuitable time. In the first place a large number of citizens who would have supported the measures were out of the city, and secondly, the fact that the tax bills have just been distributed, played havoc with the chances of the by-laws. Ratepayers looked at the amounts on the blue tax bills, hesitated, and the measures were lost. Dozens of ratepayers stated to the Examiner that had it not been for the reminder on their tax bills that their taxes had increased during the year they would have supported the by-laws.

A very large number did not vote at all and, as usual, in the case of a small vote the majority of those who did take the trouble of voting [illegible] for the purpose of defeating [illegible]. The returns came in quickly, the last one reaching the city clerk's office as the clocks were striking six, just an hour after the polls closed.

The following tables will show just how the different subdivisions dealt with the three by-laws:

MAN ROBBED OF $200 ON HIS WAY TO PETERBOROUGH

TORONTO, JULY 28.—An attempt to victimize new arrivals at the station by the offer of friendship, was quickly broken up shortly before midnight.

When John Donoghy, an ironworker, who came from Ireland in May, and was last night travelling from Galt to Peterborough, stepped up to the cigar stand at the station about eleven o'clock for a package of cigarettes, his valise disappeared. In it there were nineteen sovereigns, two half-sovereigns, $100 in Canadian money, and a watch and chain, besides wearing apparel.

"That man was with me at the time," said Donoghy, pointing to William Grossmith, charged with the theft, "but he disappeared at the same time." Grossmith had become quite friendly at the station before the occurrence at the cigar stand, so when Donoghy went to the police-headquarters he had a name to give to DetectiveW allace.

"We went to his room," Wallace stated, "and there found the valise cut up. A few sovereigns were still in it, some of the property had been transferred to his own suitcase as though he was getting ready to leave town and some money was missing. Grossmith was in bed undressed, with one gold piece beside him."

The substance of the man's defence was that he was just keeping it safe for his newly-found friend.

There was a conviction, but in order that the balance of the money may be recovered, sentence was delayed till Tuesday night.

Gordon, to the effect that Bruce Roy who up to the present time has been serving a sentence of two years less one day in the Central Prison, has been released on ticket of leave by the order of His Excellency the Governor General. Bruce Roy was mixed up in a chicken stealing case some time ago and received the above sentence at the hands of Magistrate Dumble.

CHARGED WITH THEFT OF $18

LINDSAY, JULY 28.—This afternoon, shortly after one o'clock, Chief of Police Chilton and Geo. Foster arrested two boys residing on Russell street east, charged with the theft of $18 and two C.P.R. railway tickets, the property of Rev. P. Moreland Lambe, Leaside, who has been visiting relatives in town. The reverend gentleman missed his money last Tuesday, together with the pocket boo kwhich contained it. Chief Chilton was made acquainted with the circumstances. One of the accused is named Eddie Ware ,age 19 years while the other is under the Juvenile Delinquent act.

Both have admitted having had the money in their possession, but they claim they found it and afterwards gave it to an Italian who claimed he lost it and who gave them a dollar for finding it. The youngest of the accused tore up the railway tickets as he thought they were useless. The torn pieces were found near their home.

This afternoon the accused appeared before Magistrate Jackson and through their counsel, Mr. F. Holmes Hopkins, pleaded not guilty. They were remanded until Friday next, 4th of August.

OVERCOME BY THEIR CHARMS

The Lindsay Post says:

"A young Peterborough man, who was at the G.T.R. station in that city last night when the Lindsay excursionists had gathered, had quite an interesting experience. He entered one of the coaches and was hypnotized to such an extent by the charms of certain Lindsay young ladies that he did not notice the train pulling out and awoke from "loves young dream" when the conductor shouted "Lindsay." He returned to the Electric City this morning."

WESTERN PROVINCES ARE STRONGLY IN FAVOUR OF RECIPROCITY AGREEMENT

Mr. William Cochrane of Young Sask. Says the People in the Grain Belt Want the Pact

PEOPLE UNITED

"Saskatchewan and Alberta are unitedly in favour of reciprocity," remarked Mr. William Cochrane, formerly of Havelock, but now of Young, Sask., in an interesting interview an Examiner representative had with him this morning. Mr. Cochrane is spending a short visit in the East and will leave for his western home next Thursday.

Mr. Cochrane says there is no doubt of the feeling of the people of the Western provinces. They want reciprocity and say so unhesitatingly. Conservative farmers share with their Liberal neighbours in this desire for the pact, although, of course, there are some strong party men who oppose the measure because it has been brought forward by the Liberals. The people of the West welcome the prospect of another market near at hand for their products, especially for their wheat, and will support the measure in the coming elections in a way that may surprise some Eastern parties.

CLUNG TO OVER-TURNED CANOE FOR THREE HOURS

Particulars of the Drowning of Earle Weller in the West—In Trying to Recover a Pipe Canoe was Upset and Unfortunate Boy Hung on Until His Strength was Exhausted

Further to the drowning of Earle Weller in Lake Wabamun on Friday last it is now ascertained that he was in a canoe with a friend, a young man named Bradburn when he (Weller) dropped his pipe into the water. Bradburn jumped into the lake to recover the pipe and Earle, in turning round to pick up his friend, overturned the craft. The two companions held fast to the canoe for the space of three hours, and though they shouted lustily, no one seemed to hear them. At length, however, a person on the banks of the lake, discovered them by means of a telescope. He, with others, set out to rescue the unfortunate pair, but before they could reach the canoe, Weller sank. Bradburn, too, was in an awful predicament and despite the efforts of his rescuers to revive him, he was unconscious for the space of one hour.

Attempts have been made to recover the body, but, as yet without success. The water at that portion of the lake is said to be forty feet deep.

DREAMED SHE SAW HER MISTRESS MURDERED

RICHMOND, VA., JULY 28—A horrible dream in which Maisi Green, the old negro "mammy," who nursed Mrs. Henry Clay Beattie through her illness at the time of the birth of her child, saw her mistress murdered, today became a part of the material evidence with which the prosecution hopes to convict Henry Clay Beattie, jun., of the crime.

The aged woman's testimony has given the authorities a psychological texture which they consider of the utmost value.

Maizi Green relates that one midnight about four weeks before the tragedy as she was sleeping in the same room with Mrs. Beattie and her baby, she had a fearful dream and shrieked aloud in her sleep, awakening Mrs. Beattie.

"What is the matter, Maizi?" asked Mrs. Beattie, startled.

"Miss Louise, I saw a man creep into the room, pass around my couch, and point a gun at your face—" then the woman hesitated.

"Well, go on," Mrs. Beattie said. "What else?"

"The man put the gun to your face and pulled the trigger. Just as the gun exploded it tore into your face," continued the negro woman, "and you were killed."

The nurse and Mrs. Beattie sat up for some time discussing the dream and then they retired. Next day the negro woman related the dream to others, and on Tuesday night, July 18, it was made a reality on Midlothian turnpike when Mrs. Beattie was shot to death while riding with her husband in his automobile.

Greater secrecy than ever was thrown about their work to-day by the detectives working on the case, they explaining that it was desired to keep the defense in ignorance of the evidence. It was stated, however, that a witness had been secured who on the night of the murder heard a woman's scream, then a shotgun exploded, followed by the tooting of a horn. This is contrary to the statement of the husband, in which he said that after the shot was fired by the highwayman that killed his wife he yelled for help and tooted his horn. The detectives will not divulge the name of the new witness.

Henry Clay Beattie, jun., is beginning to break down under the weight of the melancholy induced by his close confinement. To-day for the first time he showed signs of irritation at his surroundings and at the batch of post cards and letters which since his arrest have come to him daily. He has abandoned his care-free demeanor and seems to consider seriously each hint of any new development in the case. Prison officials predicted today that the young man's downfall would be sudden and complete.

R. N. Owens, father of the slain woman, declined to talk about the crime to-day saying that he and the elder Beattie have always been close friends and have been drawn even more closely together by their mutual bereavement which has left to their care a grandchild in whose welfare they are intensely interested. Baby Beattie is reported to be happy and healthy at Newport News.

The county officials and city detectives are still working at odds and there is little harmony in their efforts. The gun is still in the possession of Officer Jarret, of Chesterfield county, while the broken piece of stock is in the hands of the city detectives. Jarret stated to-day that if necessary he would obtain a court order to compel the detectives to relinquish the broken stock.

WALLS OF BABE CAUSE A TRAGEDY

PITTSBURG, P. A., JULY 27.—Crazed by the fretting and constant crying of his 5 months 'old daughter, George Kossuth, aged 23, in a fit of violence shot and seriously wounded his wife Mary, aged 20, then bending over the baby's crib Kossuth sent a bullet through his own heart, causing instant death.

The baby had cried during the night, keeping Kossuth awake. He was angry when he arose and began quarreling with his young wife. The baby continued to cry. The husband placed his hands over his ears and paced the floor.

"I cannot stand this," he moaned, and pulling a revolver from his pocket he fired at his wife, who was trying to quiet the child, the bullet striking her in the shoulder. He kissed the baby good-bye ,then killed himself.

IN JAIL 2 YEARS; HE PAYS UP ALIMONY

IOLA, KAN., JULY 27—After passing nearly two years in the county jail, following his refusal to pay his divorced wife alimony after she had been married again, Peter Ball was released this week. He settled the case by paying $191, of which his former wife will get $65 as alimony. The former Mrs. Ball was allowed $480 alimony, but when she remarried Ball refused to pay this, saying her present husband was able to support her. The court, however, ordered him to pay the alimony, and he refused. During the two years he has been in jail his attorneys say he had expended much more fighting the case than it would have taken to settle.

DUBOIS, Pa., JULY 27. — Philip Dusch, a well-known resident of Brady township, died thirty minutes after being stung by a honey bee. Mr. Dusch went out to place a cap on a hive and was heard to call. The man's wish was followed at his funeral. Stellar willed all his property, including a large farm and considerable savings to Joseph Haas, a grocer, who befriended him in his last illness.

FISHHOOK'S PECULIAR JOURNEY

LAWRENCEBURG, IND., JULY 27—Parker E. Robbins, aged 26, swallowed a small fishhook fifteen years ago. He suffered terrible pain for a few days and physicians at that time made an unsuccessful effort to extract it. Though the doctors claimed that he could not survive long, the pain passed away and no further annoyance was sustained until one day this week when Robbins experienced an itching sensation in the instep of his right foot and a small red lump appeared. He opened this with a needle and discovered the fish hook, which was extracted.

A SURE ROAD TO A HAPPY OLD AGE.

This describes in a few words the Canadian Government's Annuities Scheme. That this "sure road" is available to all residents of Canada who are over 5 years of age irrespective of sex, health, age or worldly position, is worthy of consideration. Parents may begin the purchase of annuities for their children, or children, who have prospered, may find in this scheme a safe way to provide an income for fathers and mothers who have not been so fortunate in life as they. On the other hand, people who have a limited income can increase that sum substantially by the transfer of their capital to the Government for the purchase of an annuity.

Full particulars may be obtained concerning this scheme by addressing the Superintendent of Canadian Government Annuities, Ottawa. Postage free.

THE FATE OF THE BY-LAWS.

It is to be regretted that the property owners did not take a greater interest in the by-laws that were submitted for their approval yesterday. The rejection by the ratepayers of the by-laws fixing the assessments of the Peterborough Lock Co. and the Ackerman Co. only means that they will have to be re-submitted to the ratepayers at an additional expenditure of the expense of so doing. Good faith must be kept by the city in cases of this kind, and the city cannot afford to deal with measures in the indifferent way that these by-laws seem to be treated. Other municipalities in this province that could be named, would give the B. F. Ackerman Co. and the Peterborough Lock Co., buildings and grounds, all that would be required, should they remove their businesses to other places, and Peterborough can neither afford this nor can they afford to treat indifferently agreements made by the men they elect. The rejection of these by-laws is a snub at the Council that they so unanimously elected last January. The Council should re-submit the by-laws to the ratepayers at a time when the voters will take greater interest in matters that affect the city. Indifference will fully describe the attitude of the ratepayers yesterday.

RECIPROCITY IN B. C.

(Hamilton Times)

"Col." Clark, M.P.P., has been out west with Borden, warning the people against the dangers—the mysterious peril—of reciprocity. "Just what the Opposition thinks that danger may be," says the Vancouver Sunset, "does not seem quite clear from their speeches, nor does Colonel Clark elucidate it quite so happily as one might expect from a man of his pungent wit and faculty for terse phraseology." And it has not been a very successful bogey. The Sunset says:

It seems a pity that a man of Col. Clark's undoubted courage, his proven pluck and high optimism should get wobbly in the knees and bulging in the yes at the thought of buying and selling more goods with the United States. Also it is a national catastrophe that a party which in other days had the courage, the strength of conviction and the patriotic fervor that made Confederation a fact by building a railway from sea to sea when all the rest of the world was wagging its head and looking on with apprehension, should now hold Canadians to be a set of poltroons who would sacrifice their heritage for a mess of trade pottage, which they tell us will happen if Canada enters into closer trade relations with the United States. But to-day the great Conservative party has got nerves, and is seeing goblins in every crate of cabbage or sack of potatoes or carload of coal which will cross the boundary line under reciprocity, and every goblin is trying to get Canada. The goblin argument may do for some people but Col. Clark has doubtless discovered that it doesn't scare the people of British Columbia. . .

"Col." Clark, who poses as a wit, must feel like retiring to his chamber and laughing heartily at the games sought to be played on the westerners. The Sunset says that British Columbia stands to gain more and lose less by reciprocity than any other part of the Dominion. It thinks his visit will cure the political blues. "Only such hopeless cases as those of Geo. H. Cowan, M.P., and J. D. Taylor, M.P., are beyond the reach of the cheerful optimism that pervades the atmosphere of British Columbia. Col. Hugh Clark, after his visit to British Columbia, should go back to Ontario with a smile on his lips and no fear in his heart, if he will but read the signs and absorb the spirit of courage which pervades the people of this province. There is no fear of annexation, trade diversion to north and south lines nor any other bugaboo to reciprocity in British Columbia." He is assured that British Columbia will welcome reciprocity, and if the Liberals make up and get busy "he will learn after the next election that at least eighty per cent. of British Columbia's delegation will go to Ottawa to support the measure." The "Col." is advised to be of good cheer, and to tell the people of Ontario "that there is a province out on the Pacific Coast that isn't scared of reciprocity and can't be bluffed for any middle straight draw in the games of trade, politics or—well, where bluffing is sometimes done."

FRANCE IN MOROCCO.

(Toronto Star)

The difficulty in dealing with the Moroccan situation is in part due to the fact that Germany demands a more efficient protection of her commercial interests there, but would be sure to object to the extension of French power which would make such protection certain. Sir H. H. Johnston, writing in the Nineteenth Century, expresses the opinion that "Far and away the best thing for Morocco at the present day would be the distinct and clear establishment of a French protectorate, and the reduction of the Sultan to the same position as that now honourably occupied by the Bay of Tunis." It is apparent that Germany is not likely to get her fair share of Moroccan trade until some such arrangement is made. The Germans, however, already grudge France her supremacy in that section of North Africa.

Sir Harry Hamilton Johnston is an authority on African questions. He is connected with an imposing list of geographical and anthropological societies in England, europe, and America, is vice-president of the African Society, former Consul-General Regency of Tunis and the Uganda Protectorate, has explored North Africa, Portuguese West Africa, and other sections of the dark continent. His article, written before the Agadir incident had aroused British feeling, is therefore of paramount interest. That Germany has a grievance, he frankly admits. Noting that the Franco-British agreement of 1904 recognised the privileged position of the United Kingdom in Egypt and the Egyptian Sudan, as well as the supremacy of France in Morocco, he states that "So far as Great Britain is concerned, she has, for a very apparent compensation elsewhere, surrendered any claims she may possess to free trade in North Africa," and adds:

"Great Britain has received compensation for any harm which may come to her commerce by the establishment of French rule over Morocco, while Germany has not; and the plea of previous articles of mine in this review has been that, for the sake not only of the world's peace but of the development of the world's resources in barbarous countries, the position of Germany and order that Germany might receive the most careful attention at the hands of the other great powers, in order that eGrmany might receive fair play and be deprived of any inducement to disturb the world's peace by assertions of fair or of unsatisfied claims."

If Sir Harry Hamilton is correct in his view of the situation, any international agreement which may be arrived at will probably concede something to Germany in the way of further commercial privileges, to secure which, the country may be made even more subservient to France than it is at present. The future status of the inhabitants remains to be considered. The writer in question describes them as "the Sultan's unruly and unwilling subjects, who are madly fanatical against the Christian European, pitilessly cruel, tribe against tribe, warped and spoilt by twelve centuries of civil war." He believes that under a French protectorate "Morocco's incalculable natural riches would be thrown open to commerce, while science would gain prodigiously by the examination of wonderful monuments of the past stretching back into far-distant ages of pre-history. There would be revelations of paleontological fauna which would almost rival that of the Himalayan foot-hills, there would be fresh discoveries in botany, in living zoology, and the evolution of human races, which would exceed in interest anything yet made known by the French in Algeria and Tunis. Yet," he adds, "Germany not only bars the way, but is said to have incited Spain to claim more than her fair proportion of intervention in Northern Morocco, and possibly even to forestall the French in opening up railway communication with Fez, the real capital of the Moorish Empire. Meantime, and until Germany and France can come to an understanding the good days of Morocco are delayed."

(Ottawa Free Press)

With the dissolution of parliament now growing hourly nearer the members are already engaging their Pullman berths for home next week.

The election is due in about ten weeks, and members are now more interested in fixing up political fences in their respective constituencies than in the chamber. The chief topics of discussion are as to the probable date of dissolution and as to election prospects. Indications now point to a speedier ending of the present process of demonstrating the sheer obstruction of the opposition than was at first expected. The House has now been in session over two weeks since re-assembling after the Coronation adjournment. Not a bit of progress has been made despite the steady efforts of the government to advance the passing of the reciprocity agreement.

Yesterday's obstruction with many hours taken up in discussing an old subject already threadbare from previous threshing out in the public accounts committee and in the House was almost the limit in waste of time hitherto perpetrated by the obstructionists. A few more object lessons like that of yesterday and the government will feel convinced that it has done its full duty in attempting to force the reciprocity agreement through parliament. This is the issue on which the impasse has developed and will be almost the sole issue of the coming elections.

Other Business Can Wait.

The other business of the House, although of considerable volume, can wait over until the new parliament assembles in late October or early November without serious injury to the public interests. In the present temper of the Opposition, it is practically useless to attempt to make any progress either with supply or with the other items of government legislation on the programme unless the government is willing to accept the dictation of the minority throughout. Consequently dissolution may come almost any time now. The general expectation is that the latter end of next week will see the finish.

INVESTIGATE OLIVER CHARGES

The Government is anxious to give the Opposition an opportunity of first investigating the charges against Hon. Frank Oliver and the special committee dealing with the case will hear the evidence starting on Tuesday next and holding continuous sittings. The result will be the complete exoneration of the Minister of the Interior.

Plenty of Justification.

For the holding of an election the Government now has ample justification. Parliament has now been in session since Nov. 18th, over eight months. And as yet only about half the Government business for the session has been put through. An analysis of Hansard shows that of the total time consumed only about one-third has been devoted to the actual passing of legislation. Another third, or over two months in the aggregate, has been consumed in the discussion of opposition amendments of one kind or another, all practically obstructive of the real business of the House. The remaining third of the talk as spread out on Hansard has been taken up with the Government's efforts to pass reciprocity and to get supply, and with the Opposition's obstruction thereto. To continue endeavoring to do business under such conditions is clearly useless. The facts of the session clearly demonstrate the need of the people's verdict on such an attempt at minority rule and the need of some system of closure to shut off unduly prolonged and useless debate. That this latter measure will come with the first session of the new Parliament is certain. It will be made a minor issue of the campaign and the mandate of the people will be asked for it by the Government.

The Election Bet Again.

As the result of the coming election it may be stated with positiveness that Sir Wilfrid and his followers never went into any contest with greater confidence of victory or with greater enthusiasm for the issue they stand for. Not a single doubt as to the outcome is heard from the Liberal ranks. One significant fact in proof of this may be given. Election bets are already on and Liberals are offering even money that the Opposition will come back with fewer members than they have in the present House. Even Conservative members privately admit that they do not think the party has much chance of victory in the coming contest, although they count on considerably reducing the Government's majority. Publicly, of course, for tactical reasons, they profess confidence that the outcome will be the defeat of the Government. Mr. Borden probably sincerely believes that he will win, but older political heads among his followers do not share in his rosy dreams and already are discussing what will happen when he comes back after suffering defeat. His personal desire to leave the storm and stress of politics for which he has little real inclination will probably be gratified. Indeed it is confidently asserted by Nova Scotia Liberals that Mr. Borden with the junior member for Halifax, Mr. Crosby, will be badly beaten there. The present provincial elections are one indication of that.

Look for Few Changes.

As to the result by provinces, while of course pre-election prognostications are always uncertain, it may be stated that the oldest and most astute politicians here look for comparatively few changes in the net result outside of the prairie provinces. There the Liberals look for a clean sweep in Alberta and Saskatchewan with at least a gain of two seats in Manitoba.

The other provinces are expected to remain about as they now are, the vote running Liberal and Conservative along the lines of the election of 1908, with each side making a few gains depending largely on the personal popularity of the candidates. As far as all reports received here indicate there is certainly no Liberal slump on in any district on the reciprocity issue. Advices in fact are the other way round, and one hears more of troubles of Conservative members with their pro-reciprocity constituents than of recalcitrants among the Liberal voters.

First Week in October.

The election will be held just as soon as the voters' lists can be got ready. Were it not for the delay in consignment upon the revision of the Northern Ontario lists, polling could take place in the third or fourth week in September, but using all possible expedition it is not probable that the Northern Ontario lists can be revised and printed before Oct. 1st. The election will therefore probably be held during the first week in October.

The Government plans to call the new Parliament together within two or three weeks after the election. A short session will be held with reciprocity as the first order of business and the agreement should be rectified before the Christmas adjournment.

AN APPEAL ON BEHALF OF THE NATIVE CHRISTIANS LIVING IN INDIA

Dear Friend—

As you read the following lines, please make a resolution to take note of the distressing condition of the native Christians in the vicinity, in Gujerat, India, and decide, with God's help, to make at least one of them happy and independent by a little personal effort and mention to others of their need.

Gujerat is a fertile, densely populated country on the west coast of India, directly north of Bombay. The population is about 10,000,000. Fully four-fifths of the people are engaged directly or indirectly in tilling the soil. They live for the most part in small villages and as a people are very religious but not particularly spiritual. Several missions representing the leading denominations and societies are experiencing considerable encouragement in their work here in Gujerat.

It is desired to call attention to a great opportunity for helping the struggling Christians in this vicinity to get on their own feet and become independent.

ORIGIN OF PRESENT CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY

The reader will probably recall the terrible famine that cast its dark shadow over Gujerat eleven years ago. During the famine thousands of people were saved from the horrors of starvation through the generous gifts of God's stewards in the home-land dispensed with judicious care by the missionaries living in the afflicted country. Many of the natives were so impressed by the love and material help bestowed upon them that they became enquirers and later earnest Christians.

PRESENT SOCIAL CONDITION

The famine came and went, but to-day there is a large number of Christian people, nearly all humble farmers, who have to live constantly amid the most degrading heathen surroundings. They are literally crying out for deliverance. Only one who has lived in India for some time and has met the people over and over again in their poverty-stricken homes, can fully realize what it means to be a low-caste Christian in bigoted India.

Many instances of cruelty, oppression and persecution could be cited revealing the contempt and hatred heaped upon the poor Christians by their high-caste neighbours, who are enraged that the Christian people no longer bow the neck to them nor perform all kinds of drudgery without any remuneration.

The brief mention of one recent case of persecution will have to suffice. A few months ago the headman in a nearby village walked into the home of one of our Christian men, who was lying on his cot ill with malarial fever, and said roughly: "Get up out of this; go and get fodder for my oxen! What are you good for anyway?" The sick man replied in a weak voice: "It is impossible for me to do your work, as I am very ill." Immediately upon hearing this the Mukdee (head-man became enraged and beat the defenceless man cruelly with his heavy county shoe. He was so severely injured that for some time his recovery was doubtful. the Mukdee was, of course, reprimanded, but retained his hatred of this innocent Christian man and showed it the second time by having him arrested and handcuffed simply because his little daughter picked some grain in a nearby field. Only when pressure was brought to bear on the Mukdee did he consent to release the man, who is still remaining loyal to Christ, —through his courage and consistent life his brother has recently become an enquirer.

The Christian parents find it an almost hopeless task to shield their children effectually from the vice and obscenity in the heathen quarters where they are at present obliged to live.

The low-caste heathen have a wretched custom of eating the meat of cattle given them by the high-caste people in return for work done in the fields. The animals are never available in this way except when they die from some disease, as it is contrary to the Hindu religion to butcher any animal. The low-caste people cut up the carcasses in front of their huts. The reader can easily imagine how a Christian man living a few feet away revolts over the whole procedure and longs to get away with his fellow Christians in a little village where they can be free from the deadening influence of heathenish customs and vices.

The sanitary conditions are, as a rule, unmentionable. This fact alone accounts, probably, for the continuation of plague in a great many places, despite the earnest efforts of the government for many years to stamp it out. Only this morning an old Christian man, who lives in a village three miles distant from the mission house, called to see me and mentioned that plague had carried off eleven members of one large family in his own town during the past few days. As the bubonic plague is very contagious, several neighbours of the family mentioned have already been stricken down and doubtless will succumb to the disease very soon.

Everything that the Christian people had was swept away in the famine years ago. Since then they have done their best to support themselves honourably by accepting any honest work available. The most they can hope to get for a hard day's work under the tropical sun is eight cents on the average, while the women do well if they earn six cents a day.

LAND PROPOSAL

The reader may say: "What you have written regarding the present circumstances of the native Christians is, of course, very undesirable, but what is the remedy?"

The remedy is within easy reach.

There are thousands of acres of fertile land lying waste since the famine for lack of cultivators. The government (which is English) is always ready to make most liberal concessions to a Christian colony. Good tracts of land are available free from all taxes for five years, while only a half-tax is required the next five years. So there is no difficulty in securing a good site for a Christian colony. There are many Christian families eager to band themselves together if only sufficient funds can be secured to give them a proper start.

An untried venture isn't suggested, as there are several such colonies in a thriving condition in differentt parts of India. But some capital was necessary in every instance to help the Colonists during the first initial years. About seven years ago, through the generosity of friends in Canada and the United States, I was able to start about a dozen families on good land in an adjoining district. To-day they are prosperous and independent.

Ten acres of land is ample here in India to support an average family. $150.00 is needed to establish such a family properly on a farm of this size. The money would be expended as follows:

farmer and his family would do most of the labour themselves as the walls are made of clay. Most of the money would be used for wood-work and tiles for the roof.

$15.00 for a cart.
$10.00 for a plough, seeder and a few other necessary articles required on the farm.
$10.00 for seed grain.
$15.00 to support the family until the first crop is harvested.

MONEY USED FOR COLONISTS WILL EVENTUALLY HELP OTHERS

As Government asks no taxes for five years each farmer can refund at least one-fourth of the amount of the loan he receives yearly. Money refunded in this manner will be used to help others as soon as it comes in hand.

If the reader is able mentally to put himself in the place of one of these Indian Christian men, be it but for a brief minute, he can readily imagine how keenly anxious he would be to get away from heathenism on to land of his own where he could be free to live as a Christian should without fear of persecution.

The Christians desiring such a colony now live in about fifteen different villages. Quite recently I went with a number of them to inspect a fine tract of land on which there is a splendid building site. They visited this same tract of land again by themselves a few weeks ago and held a prayer-meeting on the proposed building site where they poured out their hearts to God asking Him to somehow open up the way before them. They are simple-hearted people, with simple faith, so believe God will do the unusual for them.

FORMER MISSION ORPHANS NEED ENCOURAGEMENT

The past few years quite a number of the young people, who have grown up and left the Mission Orphanages, have married. These young men are supporting their families, amid many difficulties, in Ahmedabad, a large city thirty miles distant. A number are working in the cotton mills, while others have taken up different trades under the supervision of Hindu men. These young men have of course to work on Sunday, as otherwise they could not retain their positions. Naturally they are anxious to better their condition and would hail with much joy an opportunity to become self-supporting on good land of their own.

Careful discrimination will be made in deciding what men are most worthy of help. No one will be given a start on a farm unless he has proved himself willing to do hard work cheerfully. Considerable work will be available this year, at one of the stations in an adjoining district, where the calibre of the prospective farmers can be ascertained without their knowledge, as they won't be told they are being put to a practical test regarding their ability to take hold of general work in an efficient manner.

The reader is doubtless familiar with Christ's promise as found in Luke's Gospel 6: 38 which reads: "Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and running over, shall men give into your bosom. For with the same measure that ye mete withal it shall be measured to you again." If we really believe this promise to be literally true it won't be difficult to respond to the need mentioned in this letter.

This message is sent out with the prayer that it may be used of God to stir many to help the needy brethren in this part of Gujerat.

WHEN SUMMER COMES GUARD YOUR BABY

The summer months are the most dangerous of the year for the little one. The complaints of this season come so quickly that often a precious little life is beyond aid before the mother realizes baby is ill. Colic, diarrhoea and cholera infantum are all rife at this time. The mother must guard her baby's health every minute. She must be careful of his food and careful that his stomach is kept sweet and his bowels move regularly and freely. To do this nothing can equal Baby's Own Tablets — they are mothers best friend at all times of the year, but more especially in the summer, when, if given occasionally, they act as a preventive of those dreaded summer troubles, or if they do come on suddenly the Tablets will just as quickly remove the cause and baby will soon be well again. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

HON. RICHARD McBRIDE

The Premier of the Pacific Province as Described by O'Connor

T. P. O'Connor, M.P., thus describes Hon. Richard McBride, Premier of British Columbia:

As my first impression there came the idea that there was something singularly appropriate in the man and the country he rules. Mr. McBride is massive. I should say he is over six feet high; he has shoulders so broad that even a professional athlete might envy them; a chest of great breadth and depth, and a physique altogether that is striking and imposing—I might say dominating. From any crowd of men, however big, this figure would stand forth in conspicuous and haunting relief; you would find it difficult to keep your eyes off him. And the face and head are as striking as the splendidly and broadly proportioned body. The face is massive but short and round. It is typically Irish in its features, but instead of the typically rubicund complexion of the men and women of the Emerald Isle, it has the pallor—healthy but pallid all the same—of those who live in the severer climate of the New World. The head is again massive and, surmounted by a mane of thick, snow-white hair, it makes even more striking the personal appearance. There is at first a curious resemblance to the head of Sir Wilfrid Laurier—the same complexion, the same massiveness of head, the same mane of white hair, but the resemblance is not as great when you examine the two men more closely. Sir Wilfrid Laurier has the long thin face of the typical Frenchman—indeed the Dominion Premier always looks to me as if he had walked out of portrait of the noblesse of France in the days before the Revolution. Mr. McBride has the short face, the massive head, and the thick hair of the Celt of the West. Analysing still further the face and features of the figure of the great British Columbian, you see curious contradictions with the impression of athletic massiveness. The mouth is small, the deep-set eyes are soft brown, the feet and hands are small—there are delicacy, sensitiveness, a certain artistic element in this big massive man as well as strength. And, above all, the dominating impression is of strength that is at the same time the simplicity, the geniality, and the comradeship of that true democratic sentiment you find in these new countries, where men all start from small beginnings before they reach to wealth and power.

It is one of the secrets of Mr. McBride's unique hold over his people that he belongs to them in every nerve of his being. He was born in British Columbia, and though he went to the law school at Halifax, in Nova Scotia, to get his professional training, he has lived almost every hour of his life in his own province and among his own people. And he is never out of touch with them or with their outlook on things. Any day you can see him in Victoria, moving easily among the people, saluting every man he meets, for he knows them all; or seated in the vestibule in the beautiful Canadian Pacific Hotel over a cup of tea, talking easily and familiarly to everyone who comes to join his circle. He is the ruler with something of the Cadi in his methods and manners.

LONG THREADS OF ASBESTOS

They are Now Manufactured a Hundred Yards Long—Discovery of Deposits in Canada

All asbestos lands in Canada which belong to the Crown can be acquired either by purchase or concession or may be occupied and worked under a mining license. Any person may prospect without a license, however.

In 1877 a farmer named Fecteau discovered deposits of importance, and the first real mine began operations shortly afterwards. It is said that the enterprise was a paying one from the start. Seven mines in all were opened in the first few years. One of these is said to have paid $24,000 in one year upon an investment of $6,000.

Asbestos was first mined in Italy, and prior to 1880 it was the only country that produced it at a commercial profit. The Italian asbestos is very silky in appearance and grey to brown in color. Often the fibres are several feet in length.

Asbestos upon leaving the cobbing sheds is sent to the spinning mills in bags holding about a hundred pounds. Upon its arrival, it is first forecarded by a machine similar to the saw-tooth gin used in cotton mills. This separates the tangled fibres, after which a final carding takes place on a regular carding machine. When the asbestos leaves the carding machine it is combed smoothly and the fibres laid parallel in a uniform mass. This mass is treated in a rotary spinning machine.

This first spins it into a coarse yarn, and then draws and spins this yarn until it becomes fine and quite strong. Where a hard, strong thread is required for certain fabrics the asbestos yarn is put into a doubling and twisting machine, where two or more of the yarn threads are combined. Of course, if the asbestos is to be impregnated with rubber a smooth, hard-finished thread is not desirable.

The spinning of asbestos for a long time seemed of great difficulty owing to the manner in which the threads persisted in slipping past each other. Finally it was discovered that under the microscope a thread of asbestos showed a notched surface, and that by means of special twisting the spinning could be made successful. Now, after much experimenting, manufacturers are able to spin a single asbestos thread of 100 yards in length not weighing over an ounce.—India Rubber World.

Pigs

Pigs that are apt to have "differences of opinion" should be separated. Fighting takes off flesh.

There should be placed in every pig yard and pasture a box with salt, charcoal, air-slaked lime, bonemeal and hardwood ashes, so the pigs can help themselves at will.

Hogs do not dig in the earth altogether for the fun of it. They get a lot to eat that way—grass- roots, worms, bites of stuff of different kinds that help to make bone and muscle.

Horses

Raise the type of colt that sells best, in your community.

If a colt is worth raising at all he is worth raising well.

Some folks get so in the habit of saing "Whoa!" to their horses when they do not mean it that these faithful animals cannot tell when their masters do really mean to have them stop, so they keep going. When you say "Whoa!" mean it. That is the only way your horses have of knowing what to do.

Sheep

Diseases get a fast hold of many a flock of sheep through foul drinking water. Never give stagnant water if you can help it.

A few trees in the pasture add greatly to the comfort of the sheep, these days. If you can't have them, set up a few posts and cover a bit of ground over for a shed.

MILK YOU CANNOT SPILL

The people of Siberia often buy their milk frozen, and for convenience it is allowed to freeze about a stick, which forms a handle to carry it by.

The milkman leaves one chunk or two, as the case may be, at the homes of his customers. The children of Irkutsk, instead of crying for a drink of milk, cry for a bite of milk. The people in winter-time do not say, "Be careful not to spill the milk," but "Be careful not to break the milk." Broken milk is better than spilled milk, though, because there is an opportunity to save the pieces.

A quart of frozen milk on a stick is a very formidable weapon in the hand of an angry man or boy, as it is possible to knock a person down with it. Irkutsk people hang their milk on hooks instead of putting it in pans, though, of course, when warm spring weather comes, pans and pails are used, as the milk begins to melt.—Answers.

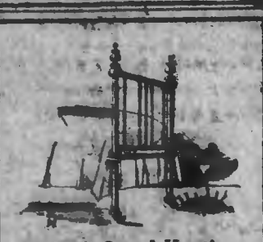
THE HEAD OF THE HOUSE

There is a man who fancies he is the head of his house. This particular man has several small children, and it pleases him to discourse a great deal on the training of children. A few days ago he had friends visiting him. His two little sons began to play about noisily. It is one of his theories that children should obey implicitly. He wanted his friends to see how he carried it out in the training of his own children.

"Johnny," he said, sternly, "stop that noise instantly."

Johnny looked up in surprise, then grinned a little.

"Oh, Freddy," he said to his brother, as they went on with the noise, "just hear papa trying to talk like mamma."



Couldn't Stand Keatings

There was a fat, round bed bug,
Lived long in warmth and ease--
He took a bite of Keatings,
And hence his obsequies.

Keatings Powder is odorless and stainless, and it expels bed bugs or kills them with deadly certainty.

FOUGHT THE EDITOR

He Came Early Yesterday and the Assailants Were Repulsed

A scene recalling some of the vicissitudes of journalistic life in the wild West was enacted in the editorial office of a Socialist journal in Paris. On the occasion of a recent visit to Rouen by President Falliéres, the editor, M. Ernest Morel, wrote a scathing reply to a manifesto issued by the Camelots du Roi. Four followers of this society called at the office and demanded the name of the writer. The editor made no secret that he was the author of the article, at which confession they fell on him with walking sticks and beat him severely. A fierce fight ensued when some editorial assistants flung themselves into the fray, and finally expelled the intruders with the loss of two hats and two walking-sticks. In the struggle the office was wrecked, furniture broken, and desks turned topsy-turvy. After the battle was over it was found that M. Morel had a black eye and a swollen nose, and other injuries about the head. Two assistants were also injured.

ELECTRICITY AND HEALTH

Experiments Which Show Greater Development in Electrified Children

Bright and "brainy" children with robust physical development, by means of electricity, is the promise held out to mankind by the experiments conducted in Stockholm at the suggestion of Professor Svante Arrhenius. Fifty school children have been divided into groups. They are identical in point of health, height, weight, and are placed in two classrooms of the same size, and having the same amount of light. Exactly the same teaching is given in each classroom, but one of the classrooms is subjected to discharges of electricity, and the other is not. Though the experiment is not yet concluded, it has been found possible already to report that the "electrified" children have responded by showing greater mental and physical development than the children not so treated.

YOUR GRAY HAIRS QUICKLY VANISH

A Harmless Remedy, Made from Garden Sage, Restores Color to Gray Hair.

A feeling of sadness accompanies the discovery of the first gray hairs, which, unfortunately, are looked upon as heralds of advancing age. Gray hairs, however, are not always an indication of advancing age, for many people have gray hairs quite early in life. Of course, it is quite natural, and indicates that there is something wrong with the individual, and that Nature needs assistance in correcting the trouble. The same is true of hair that is constantly falling out and becoming thinner every day. If everything is right with Nature, the hair, even in comparatively elderly people, should be long, thick and glossy, without even a streak of gray.

The ideal assistant to Nature in restoring and preserving the hair is Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy, a clean and wholesome dressing for daily use. It not only removes dandruff, but strengthens weak, thin and falling hair and promotes its growth. A few applications will restore faded or gray hair to its natural color.

This preparation is referred to the public at fifty cents a bottle, and is recommended and sold by all druggists.

AN APPEAL ON BEHALF OF THE NATIVE CHRISTIANS LIVING IN INDIA

Dear Friend—

As you read the following lines, please make a resolution to take note of the distressing condition of the native Christians in the vicinity, in Gujerat, India, and decide, with God's help, to make at least one of them happy and independent by a little personal effort and mention to others of their need.

Gujerat is a fertile, densely populated country on the west coast of India, directly north of Bombay. The population is about 10,000,000. Fully four-fifths of the people are engaged directly or indirectly in tilling the soil. They live for the most part in small villages and as a people are very religious but not particularly spiritual. Several missions representing the leading denominations and societies are experiencing considerable encouragement in their work here in Gujerat.

It is desired to call attention to a great opportunity for helping the struggling Christians in this vicinity to get on their own feet and become independent.

ORIGIN OF PRESENT CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY

The reader will probably recall the terrible famine that cast its dark shadow over Gujerat eleven years ago. During the famine thousands of people were saved from the horrors of starvation through the generous gifts of God's stewards in the home-land dispensed with judicious care by the missionaries living in the afflicted country. Many of the natives were so impressed by the love and material help bestowed upon them that they became enquirers and later earnest Christians.

PRESENT SOCIAL CONDITION

The famine came and went, but to-day there is a large number of Christian people, nearly all humble farmers, who have to live constantly amid the most degrading heathen surroundings. They are literally crying out for deliverance. Only one who has lived in India for some time and has met the people over and over again in their poverty-stricken homes, can fully realize what it means to be a low-caste Christian in bigoted India.

Many instances of cruelty, oppression and persecution could be cited revealing the contempt and hatred heaped upoff the poor Christians by their high-caste neighbours, who are enraged that the Christian people no longer bow the neck to them nor perform all kinds of drudgery without any remuneration.

The brief mention of one recent case of persecution will have to suffice. A few months ago the headman in a nearby village walked into the home of one of our Christian men, who was lying on his cot ill with malarial fever, and said roughly: "Get up out of this; go and get fodder for my oxen! What are you good for anyway?" The sick man replied in a weak voice: "It is impossible for me to do your work, as I am very ill." Immediately upon hearing this the Mukdee (head-man became enraged and beat the defenceless man cruelly with his heavy county shoe. He was so severely injured that for some time his recovery was doubtful. The Mukdee was, of course, reprimanded, but retained his hatred of this innocent Christian man and showed it the second time by having him arrested and handcuffed simply because his little daughter picked some grain in a nearby field. Only when pressure was brought to bear on the Mukdee did he consent to release the man, who is still remaining loyal to Christ, through his courage and consistent life his brother has recently become an enquirer.

The Christian parents find it an almost hopeless task to shield their children effectually from the vice and obscenity in the heathen quarters where they are at present obliged to live.

The low-caste heathen have a wretched custom of eating the meat of cattle given them by the high-caste people in return for work done in the fields. The animals are never available in this way except when they die from some disease, as it is contrary to the Hindu religion to butcher any animal. The low-caste people cut up the carcases in front of their huts. The reader can easily imagine how a Christian man living a few feet away revolts over the whole procedure and longs to get away with his fellow Christians in a little village where they can be free from the deadening influence of heathenish customs and vice.

The sanitary conditions are, as a rule, unmentionable. This fact alone accounts, probably, for the continuation of plague in a great many places, despite the earnest efforts of the government for many years to stamp it out. Only this morning an old, Christian man who lives in a village three miles distant from the mission house, called to see me and mentioned that plague had carried off eleven members of one large family in his own town during the past few days. As the bubonic plague is very contagious, several neighbours of the family mentioned have already been stricken down and doubtless will succumb to the disease very soon.

Everything that the Christian people had was swept away in the famine years ago. Since then they have done their best to support themselves honourably by accepting any honest work available. The most they can hope to get for a hard day's work under the tropical sun is eight cents on the average, while the women do well if they earn six cents a day.

LAND PROPOSAL

The reader may say: "What you have written regarding the present circumstances of the native Christians is, of course, very undesirable, but what is the remedy?"

The remedy is within easy reach.

There are thousands of acres of fertile land lying waste since the famine for lack of cultivators. The government (which is English) is always ready to make most liberal concessions to a Christian colony. Good tracts of land are available free from all taxes for five years, while only a half-tax is required the next five years. So there is no difficulty in securing a good site for a Christian colony. There are many Christian families eager to band themselves together if only sufficient funds can be secured to give them a proper start.

An untried venture isn't suggested, as there are several such colonies in a thriving condition in differentt parts of India. But some capital was necessary in every instance to help the Colonists during the first initial years. About seven years ago, through the generosity of friends in Canada and the United States, I was able to start about a dozen families on good land in an adjoining district. To-day they are prosperous and independent.

Ten acres of land is ample here in India to support an average family. $150.00 is needed to establish such a family properly on a farm of this size. The money would be expended as follows:—

farmer and his family would do most of the labour themselves as the walls are made of clay. Most of the money would be used for wood-work and tiles for the roof.

$15.00 for a cart
$10.00 for a plough, seeder and a few other necessary articles required on the farm.
$10.00 for seed grain.
$15.00 to support the family until the first crop is harvested.

MONEY USED FOR COLONISTS WILL EVENTUALLY HELP OTHERS

As Government asks no taxes for five years each farmer can refund at least one-fourth of the amounts of the loan he receives yearly. Money refunded in this manner will be used to help others as soon as it comes in hand.

If the reader is able mentally to put himself in the place of one of these Indian Christian men, be it but for a brief minute, he can readily imagine how keenly anxious he would be to get away from heathenism on to land of his own where he could be free to live as a Christian should without fear of persecution.

The Christians desiring such a colony now live in about fifteen different villages. Quite recently I went with a number of them to inspect a fine tract of land on which there is a splendid building site. They visited this same tract of land again by themselves a few weeks ago and held a prayer-meeting on the proposed building site where they poured out their hearts to God asking Him to somehow open up the way before them. They are simple-hearted people, with simple faith, so believe God will do the unusual for them.

FORMER MISSION ORPHANS NEED ENCOURAGEMENT

The past few years quite a number of the young people, who have grown up and left the Mission Orphanages, have married. These young men are supporting their families, amid many difficulties, in Ahmedabad, a large city thirty miles distant. A number are working in the cotton mills, while others have taken up different trades under the supervision of Hindu men. These young men have of course to work on Sunday, as otherwise they could not retain their positions. Naturally they are anxious to better their condition and would hail with much joy an opportunity to become self-supporting on good land of their own.

Careful discrimination will be made in deciding what men are most worthy of help. No one will be given a start on a farm unless he has proved himself willing to do hard work cheerfully. Considerable work will be available this year, at one of the stations in an adjoining district, where the calibre of the prospective farmers can be ascertained without their knowledge, as they won't be told they are being put to a practical test regarding their ability to take hold of general work in an efficient manner.

If we really believe this promise to be literally true it won't be difficult to respond to the need mentioned in this letter.

Do not let the little colt follow the dam while she is at work.

If a colt is worth raising at all he is worth raising well.

Some folks get so in the habit of using "Whoa!" to their horses when they do not mean it that these faithful animals cannot tell when their masters do really mean to have them stop, so they keep going. When you say "Whoa!" mean it. That is the only way your horses have of knowing what to do.

Sheep

Diseases get a fast hold of many a flock of sheep through foul drinking water. Never give stagnant water if you can help it.

A few trees in the pasture add greatly to the comfort of the sheep, these days. If you can't have them, set up a few posts and cover a bit of ground over for a shed.

MILK YOU CANNOT SPILL

The people of Siberia often buy their milk frozen, and for convenience it is allowed to freeze about a stick, which forms a handle to carry it by.

The milkman leaves one chunk or two, as the case may be, at the homes of his customers. The children of Irkutsk, instead of crying for a drink of milk, cry for a bite of milk. The people in winter-time do not say, "Be careful not to spill the milk," but "Be careful not to break the milk." Broken milk is better than spilled milk, though, because there is an opportunity to save the pieces.

A quart of frozen milk on a stick is a very formidable weapon in the hand of an angry man or boy, as it is possible to knock a person down with it. Irkutsk people hang their milk on hooks instead of putting it in pans, though, of course, when warm spring weather comes, pans and pails are used, as the milk begins to melt.—Answers.

THE HEAD OF THE HOUSE

There is a man who fancies he is the head of his house. This particular man has several small children, and it pleases him to discourse a great deal on the training of children. A few days ago he had friends visiting him. His two little sons began to play about politely. It is one of his theories that children should obey implicitly. He wanted his friends to see how he carried it out in the training of his own children.

"Johnny," he said, sternly, "stop that noise instantly."

Johnny looked up in surprise, then grinned a little.

"Oh, Freddy," he said to his brother, as they went on with the noise, "just hear papa trying to talk like mamma."

Couldn't Stand Keatings

There was a fat, round bed bug,
Lived long in warmth and ease--
He took a bite of Keatings,
And hence his obsequies.

Keatings Powder is odorless and stainless, and it expels bed bugs or kills them with deadly certainty.

FOUGHT THE EDITOR

He Came Shortly Afterwards and the Assailants Were Repulsed

A scene recalling some of the vicissitudes of journalistic life in the wild West was enacted in the editorial office of a Socialist journal in Paris. On the occasion of a recent visit to Rouen by President Fallieres, the editor, M. Ernest Morel, wrote a scathing reply to a manifesto issued by the Camelots du Roi. Four followers of this society called at the office and demanded the name of the writer. The editor made no secret that he was the author of the article, at which confession they fell on him with walking-sticks and beat him severely. A fierce fight ensued when some editorial assistants flung themselves into the fray, and finally expelled the intruders with the loss of two hats and two walking-sticks. In the struggle the office was wrecked, furniture broken, and desks turned topsy-turvy. After the battle was over it was found that M. Morel had a black eye and a swollen nose, and other injuries about the head. Two assistants were also injured.

ELECTRICITY AND HEALTH

Experiments Which Show Greater Development in Electrified Children

Bright and "brainy" children with robust physical development, by means of electricity, is the promise held out to mankind by the experiments conducted in Stockholm at the suggestion of Professor Svante Arrhenius. Fifty school children have been divided into groups. They are identical in point of health, height and weight, and are placed in two classrooms of the same size, and having the same amount of light. Exactly the same teaching is given in each classroom, but one of the classrooms is subjected to discharges of electricity, and the other is not. Though the experiment is not yet concluded, it has been found possible already to report that the "electrified" children have responded by showing greater mental and physical development than the children not so treated.

THE PRINCE OF WALES

Not to Participate in Public Ceremonies Until He is of Age

In a letter to the Poetry Society the King's Private Secretary writes: "I am commanded to inform you that his Majesty is gratified to learn that the Poetry Society proposes to hold a special meeting in commemoration of the investiture of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. I am, however, to explain to you that, beyond the actual investiture at Carnarvon, the King does not wish his Royal Highness to take part in any public ceremony until he is of age. The Prince of Wales will, however, be glad to accept a copy of the programme if you will kindly send it to his Royal Highness at this address."

YOUR GRAY HAIRS QUICKLY VANISH

A Harmless Remedy, Made from Garden Sage, Restores Color to Gray Hair.

A feeling of sadness accompanies the discovery of the first gray hairs, which, unfortunately, are looked upon as heralds of advancing age. Gray hairs, however, are not always an indication of advancing age, for many people have gray hairs quite early in life. Of course, it is unnatural, and indicates that there is something wrong with the individual, and that Nature needs assistance in correcting the trouble. The same is true of hair that is constantly falling out and becoming thinner every day. If everything is right with Nature, the hair, even in comparatively elderly people, should be long, thick and glossy, without even a streak of gray.

The ideal assistant to Nature in restoring and preserving the hair is Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy, a clean and wholesome dressing for daily use. It not only removes dandruff, but strengthens weak, thin and falling hair and promotes its growth. A few applications will restore faded or gray hair to its natural color.

This preparation is offered to the public at fifty cents a bottle, and is recommended and sold by all druggists.

RICHARD HALL & SON

THE CAREER OF THE FAMOUS SCOTS GUARDS

The regiment of Scots Guards, which, in the week commencing July 17th, participated in the Coronation festivities at Edinburgh, Scotland, is obscure as to its earlier records, owing to the destruction of some of the archives by fire. An English paper says it originally came from Ireland, and was named after its first colonel, Scot. Another account has it that they are the direct representatives of a Highland regiment raised in 1639 for the service of King Charles I., and who, after fighting desperately in Ireland, were almost annihilated at Dunbar and Worcester. In 1660, at any rate, the Earl of Linlithgow was appointed colonel.

Their first appearance in England was in 1686, when James VII. and II. was holding a series of reviews, a display of power which proved illusory. At Bothwell Bridge the Scots Guards were led by Lord Livingstone, son of their Colonel, who was in command of the whole force, and took a stern revenge for the disasters their predecessors had suffered at the hands of the Covenanters 28 years previously. They fought through Marlborough's wars, and did splendid service for Wellington in the Peninsula, and to enumerate their achievements would be to tell afresh the history of those years of conflict. Then they added to the victor's wreaths the gleaming, fadeless laurels of Quatre Bras and Waterloo. "Alma," "Inkerman," "Sevastopol" are names which conjure up other pictures of sternest strife. During the period of the Crimean War the Scots Guards were called "Scots Fusilier Guards," not to be confounded with the "Royal Scots Fusiliers," and it was Queen Victoria, in 1877, who, at the request of the regiment, restored the old name. The drafting of the 200 Scots Guardsmen to Edinburgh recalls the tragic sequel of the removal of the Black Watch from Scotland to London in 1743.

To understand the history of this unfortunate episode it is necessary to recall the origin of the Black Watch itself. It was in 1725 that this famous regiment was first recruited in the Highlands, and the conditions of its service was charged to disarm Highlanders, bring criminals to justice, prevent depredations, and hinder rebels from finding sanctuary in the country. Not a word was said upon any obligations to foreign service, and there is no doubt that an understanding had grown up among the troops to the effect that they were enlisted exclusively for local service in the Highlands. There were six companies in all, three of them officered from the clan of the Campbells, and the traditions of loyalty were zealously guarded during the first fifteen years of the corps' existence.

In July, 1742, however, rumours began to gain ground that the regiment was likely to be ordered abroad. It was said that George II., who had never seen a Highland soldier, was anxious to gratify his curiosity, but this would not go down with the men, and a remonstrance was drawn up by the Lord President, but quietly ignored. The spring of 1743 was not far advanced when reality was given to the rumours by the Black Watch being marched southwards, 670 strong. Twenty men deserted before they reached the border, however, and another thirty were missing by the time they got to York. Discontent grew, and when at their review on Finchley Common, it was learnt that neither the King nor the Prince of Wales had thought fit to inspect them, and that they were under orders to embark at once for Ostend, the simmering fire burst out. They deserted in detachments under arms, and kept up a sort of guerilla warfare for a week, by which time they were overpowered, and 104 of them marched off to the Tower for trial. They were all condemned to death, except one Patrick M'Gregor, who was sentenced to 200 lashes of the cat-o'-nine-tails, five times repeated, or 1,000 lashes in all. Only three, however, were actually shot upon the Tower parade, the rest were banished—broken and discredited men. The military authorities throughout seem to have treated the gallant regiment with scant consideration, and to have goaded them into a state of mutiny.

To return to the Scots Guards, the regiment has all along been strongly Scottish in its membership, and after the Crimean War the Queen's permission was given to the appointment of a band of pipers in Highland garb to both battalions.

OUR SATURDAY SERMON

Go and search diligently for the young child.—Matthew, 2, 8.

In the qualities of mercy, decency and beneficent order the world has come a very, very long ways since the command embodied in this text fell from the lips of Herod:

"Go and search diligently for the young child." Divested wholly of the cruel intent and spirit with which this injunction was launched by the wicked king who sought the life of the infant Son of Mary, this injunction rests upon the world to-day. Search diligently for the young child—not to harm or to slay him, but to save him. And, remember, we are to search for him, which means that he is not already in our homes or even in the way of our convenient and ready observation.

The search for children is an obligation imposed upon society for its own development and salvation. Society owes this duty to children because, first of all, it is responsible for them. No child ever came into this world of its own volition. Life may prove a disaster or a blessing, but whichever way it may eventuate, existence itself is a thing wholly apart from the factors of choice or consent. It is a heritage which imposes upon what may be called its administrators a sacred responsibility.

The duty of society to children is tremendously augmented because in the child we see the genesis of society. The promptings of self-interest should profoundly impress society with the grave importance of taking scrupulous heed to its antecedents — the children. Here again is implied the necessity of search, since that part of the state upon which the security of society chiefly depends is not even appreciated by these people who care only for their own and who throw out of balance all of the equities by heaping an excess of indulgence upon the children of fair fortune, which should, by the highest law of humanity, be shared with those who have been slighted and neglected.

In obedience, therefore, as much to the instinct of self-preservation as to the touch of nature that makes the whole world kin, society busies itself more and more in its search for the "young child." It is daily waxing broader in its understanding of the incalculable profits arising from such investments as children's homes, children's hospitals, places for homeless boys, and all the instrumentalities that are employed to place both young boys and girls in families where the moral atmosphere will aid their development into useful men and women.

In a standard concordance to the Bible there are six columns of references to texts in the Scriptures in which are found the word child or children. "Suffer the little children to come unto me; and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God," was the gentle language in which the Saviour of the world set upon the little ones the seal of His love and His favour. In these words, and in many like terms of endearment, Jesus of Nazareth admonished the world of its privilege in searching diligently for and gathering into folds of protection children who are given as hostages to society to be held even more sacred and inviolate when they are destitute and forsaken than when they are the idols of happy homes.

In the pitiful helplessness of young children without the guardianship which their weakness and utter dependence, cries out for, society may find a continual incentive to activities which are blessed in their exercise as in their bestowal; and which are more potential than anything else in the whole wide world to the refinement and real sanctification of humanity.

Go and search diligently every day for the young child that he may be saved in the life that now is and in that which is to come, and that you, likewise, may find a firm pledge of acceptance with heaven in the fulfillment of this great duty.

NEW CHAPEL BUILT FOR KNIGHTS OF THE THISTLE

Thanks to the patriotism and generosity of the House of Leven and Melville, King George, as Sovereign of the Knights of the Most Noble and Ancient Order of the Thistle, inaugurated, on 19th July, the beautiful little chapel which has been constructed at the south-east corner of St Giles' Cathedral from the designs and under the constant supervision of Mr. Robert Stodart Lorimer, A.R.S.A., in association with a body of picked craftsmen, whose orinigal skill he has known how to inspire and use. Thus will be brought to a fortunate issue an understanding wherein His Majesty King Edward took the keenest interest.

As will be recalled, the late Earl of Leven and Melville, subject to the terms of his will being strictly followed, left a sum of £40,000 with which to restore Holyrood Chapel as a chapel for the Knights of the Thistle. As restoration in the view of those best capable to judge would have meant reconstruction, the Holyrood scheme was wisely abandoned, and the money reverted to the estate. Thereupon, to the marked satisfaction of King Edward, young Lord Leven and Melville offered his portion of the £40,000 — amounting to between £20,000 and £25,000—in furtherance of a duly authorised scheme. The architectural plan finally adopted admirably solves various problems connected with the cathedral as a place of worship and the restricted space in Parliament Square.

Architecturally the Chapel, 35 feet long by 18 feet wide, aims to carry on the style of the stonework of the old unrestored portions of St Giles', for it was inadvisable to heed the stilted Gothic of the main edifice as veneered by Burns in 1850. To conform with the exigencies of space, which happily coincide with imaginative appropriateness, the dominating sense, especially within, is one of height. On the exterior the plain surfaces of the sensitively-finished grey stone is divided by buttresses, which correspond with the vaulting-ribs between the bays inside. At the top of the buttresses Mr. Lorimer has introduced a few grotesques, such as at one time doubtless peered from the structure of the Cathedral. Below the windows are carved in stone the coats of arms of the sixteen existing knights, while at the east-end are figures of the Patron Saint of the Order, St. Andrew; the arms of its founder and its reviver, James VII. and Queen Anne; and below the window the Royal Lion. Within, the value of what has been called the spiritual dimension—height—is enhanced by means of contrast. Through the round-arched doorway of about 1640, which to excellent purpose has been introduced into the new structure approximately at the place where was formerly the Royal entrance to the Cathedral, there is reached the low Ante-Chapel, its vaulting heavily lossed. The restriction here of the upper space serves to compress into their smallest limits mental and emotional activity as a preparation for the immediately succeeding experience. It is from this low Ante-Chapel that we pass through a doorway, richly carved with the Leven and Melville coat of arms into the soaring Chapel proper, over 40 feet high. Its plain walls have been made solidly beautiful both by the subtly varied colour and markings of the stone, taken from the Cullalo Quarry, near Aberdour, and by virtue of the way in which he has made architecture the Mother-Art under whose wing other arts and crafts reveal themselves.

Nonagenarian Takes A Long Walk To Get Shave

Silver Creek, N. Y., July 28.—Ninety-six years of age and lame, George Lillie, the oldest resident of Chautauqua County, with the sun blazing down upon him, returned on his birthday from a twenty-six-mile walk feeling, he said, "as fresh as a daisy." For years it has been his weekly custom to walk into town two miles to get shaved. He eschews vehicles of all kinds, but is particularly hostile to automobiles.

Mr. Lillie has lived on the same farm for seventy years. In many ways he is a remarkable man. His memory is as clear as a youth's and his knowledge of affairs much wider than that of the ordinary man. He reads his New York papers and the Bible regularly.

As long as people hereabouts can remember there has stood in the woods just back of the Lillie homestead a tall, dead hemlock tree, the bare, gaunt trunk of which overlooks everything else about it by fifty feet or more. Mr. Lillie has always said that when the tree toppled over his days would be at an end. The tree has leaned a little more each year, but it still stands.

"I attribute my long life," he said to a Herald reporter, "to good doctors and nothing else. I abused my health so far as eating and staying up were concerned just as everyone does, but when I got ill I went to the best doctor I could find. I've had about every disease there is, too, chronic as well as the mild things like typhoid and pneumonia. But they were all in my youth. I haven't had any serious illness since I was seventy. I haven't worked much since then either.

"I was born in Columbia County and started West in 1830, but got shipwrecked on Lake Erie and got stranded here. It was good enough for me and I just stayed. I always thought that I would live to be a hundred years old, but I'm not so sure of it now. I've got no kick coming, though. God has given me twenty-six more years already than I was entitled to and He can ship me off whenever He's ready, only I hope He'll do it quickly."

Mr. Lillie started to go to the Mexican War, but lost his way in the wilds of the West. He was too old to enlist for the Civil War.

GRANDSON OF BOBBY BURNS PASSES AWAY

The death took place on 9th July, at his house, Pollokshaws Road, Glasgow, Scotland, of James Glencairn Thomson, the last of the grandsons of the national poet of Scotland.

Naturally, Mr. Thomson was very proud of his distinguished grandfather, but he never made any claim to recognition on that account. Like the poet, he was animated by a fine spirit of independence, and he also possessed in a high degree those social qualities which were so characteristic of Robert Burns. He had a good voice, and he often delighted social gatherings, especially, meetings connected with the name of the poet, by singing his grandfather's songs. Mr. Thomson, who bore the name of one of the most generous of the patrons of the poet, was a son of Betty Burns, a daughter of the poet by Anne Park, of the Globe Tavern, Dumfries. She married John Thomson, who settled in Langside, then a quiet rural village, as a weaver, and there James Glencairn Thomson was born in 1828, so that he had reached the age of 83 years. He was trained to his father's trade, and on its decline served his apprenticeship as a pattern engraver, being first employed in the extensive calico printing works of the Messrs. Crum at Thornliebank and latterly with Messrs. Higginbotham, Glasgow, retiring from active work in 1900.

Mr. Thomson spent all his days in the neighbourhood of the place where he was born. He was a bachelor, and lived alone. His mother died more than a generation ago. With the exception of a serious illness in the beginning of 1900 Mr. Thomson enjoyed remarkably good health. A "brother of the mystic tie," he belonged to Lodge Royal Arch 153, Pollokshaws, who some years ago allowed him an annuity from their benevolent fund. Others also did what they could to comfort his declining years. In 1900, as a result of an appeal to the public, a sum of £175 was collected, and six years later a further sum of £200 was raised. On representations being made to the proper authorities a small pension was granted him from the Civil List in consideration of the eminence of his grandfather.

GUESTS AT WEDDING

The Duchess of Albany, wearing a dress of dark mauve satin, with a black bonnet relieved with touches of white and silver, and Princess Alexander of Teck, in a costume of nattier blue charmeuse, with a large white hat, Prince Alexander of Teck, and the Duke of Argyll were among the many who the other afternoon attended the wedding of Miss. Margaret Glyn, daughter of the Bishop of Peterborough and Lady Mary Glyn, and niece of the Duke of Argyll, and Commander the Hon. Herbert Meade, R.N., son of the late Admiral of the Fleet the Earl of Clanwilliam, and brother of the present Peer, at St. Margaret's Church, Westminster, London.

The Bishop gave away his daughter, and very well she looked in her wedding dress of soft white charmeuse, draped with old Brussels lace, while her veil was of the same old lace, and covered with a wreath of natural orange flowers in her hair. There were two small pages and eight bridesmaids.

MINING TIMBER USED IN CANADA IN 1910

Mines to the number of 136 use considerable quantities of timber annually in their operations. Statistics of the amount used have been collected by the Forestry Branch of the Department of the Interior. Round (unsawn) timber was used to the extent of 52,848,000 lineal feet and cost an average of $9.90 per thousand: 22,305,000 board feet of sawn lumber and timber were used worth $13.63 per thousand. The total quantity of timber used cost $827,337. The round timbers varied in diameter from three to thirty-six inches and were used mostly underground as mine supports to give artificial support for insecure roofs and walls and to protect shafts, drifts and gangways. Ordinary lumber constituted most of the sawn timber and was used above ground for buildings, breakers, tipples, washers and trestles. Below ground the sawn timber enters into the ventilator shafts and sets. Thirteen different species of wood were reported from the mining industries. Mines use species of wood which are abundant, cheap and easily obtained from near-by localities. Thus, in each province certain species were used to the exclusion of all others. British Columbia used all the fir; Nova Scotia used all the spruce, balsam and hemlock; Alberta used all the jack-pine, larch and poplar. These three provinces contain the principal coal mines and consume over 95 per cent. of Canadian mining timbers. The ore mines of Ontario, although many in number, used only one per cent. of the total. These mines are small, shallow and in the solid rock, so that little timber was required for supports.

THE GERM WHICH PRODUCES DANDRUFF

Finally Causes Baldness—Kill the Germ and Save Your Hair—Newbro's Herpicide Will Do It

Did you ever try to discover a reason for the dying of a valuable plant? You perhaps found that life was destroyed by some insect or parasite working about the roots and sapping away the elements which go to support plant life.

The dandruff germ exercises the same destructive influence upon the life of the hair. It forces its way down the follicle around the hair bulb and thus prevents the hair from getting proper nourishment. The hair dies and drops out.

Newbro's Herpicide prevents this by killing the germ. It also frees the scalp from the accumulations of dirt and scarf skin. With the removal of these obstacles to a clean, healthy scalp, the hair will grow naturally and luxuriantly.

Herpicide is known as the Original Dandruff Germ Destroyer.

Send 10c. in postage or silver to The Herpicide Co., Dept. R., Detroit, Mich., for a nice sample of Herpicide and a booklet telling all about the hair.

20. How many women of the Bible are there which excelled in spiritual power and influence?

21. When were these punishments inflicted upon Judah? (See 2 Chron. xxxvi:17-20.)

22. Verses 26-28—When a man repents of his sin does God always forgive him, and remit the penalty, or are there exceptions?

23. Verses 29-33—The entire nation seems to have repented at this time; did that keep them from being destroyed, and would it have prevented the final overthrow of the nation if they had not backslidden again?

24. This incident shows how much influence one man has who is thoroughly aroused. What practical lesson may we learn from it? (This is one of the questions which may be answered in writing by members of the club.)

Lesson for Sunday, Aug. 6th, 1911. Jeremiah Tried and Acquitted. Jer. xxvi.

POLICEMEN MUST GET AFTER EXPRESS MEN

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Have we a branch of the Lord's Day Alliance in Peterborough? I notice that the Sabbath is being broken every seven days. Express drivers are the offenders. Every Sunday they are to be seen taking trunks, valises and other baggage to the C.P.R. station for the trains that run on that day. Now, why should these men overwork themselves and their horses on the Sabbath day? If people are going on a journey on Sunday they know it and can have their stuff carted to the stations on Saturday. If they do not have it ready they are as much to blame as the express men. One express man who does his share of Sunday work, says he has not been to church for seven Sundays. Let the police get after the express man and make him keep the law. I don't know why he should be let work on Sunday while carters are idle. They are making more than their share of money.

Yours truly,
DAY OF REST.

LIVED IN SILENCE

Strange Manner of Living Prescribed by a Husband

A remarkable case of a husband who for several years only communicated with his wife by notes left on the table in their bedroom, came before the French courts when the wife petitioned for a divorce. The husband is a clerk employed by a drapery firm, but in his domestic life he was stated to be ultra-autocratic. He drew up an ordinance couched in legal phraseology, providing that husband and wife should live on their own means, each contributing a fair share to the common costs of housekeeping, the husband having the right to decide which those should be. The husband, by Clause 8 of the ordinance, further provided that he would as a rule dine at restaurants, but should he decide otherwise he would buy and cook his own food. For years the couple lived in this atmosphere of silence, the wife receiving every day notes which varied from the mildest notifications to the severest admonitions, but all alike marked by a stern and lofty tone more fitted for a dictator than a husband. Early this year came the final blow, when the husband wrote his last note in the form of an official decree to the effect that he would no longer live with his wife. The wife has now been granted a divorce.

MRS. CHRISTIAN HEMMICK

Fresh laurels have been added to those that already adorn the memory of the Barney entertainments in Paris. The latest supply was achieved by an entertainment that has left the Quartier Latin gasping at its audacity and applauding its originality. The most lavish decorations marked the occasion. Professional entertainers were engaged at enormous expense, and when the affair broke up it was voted the most lavish and unconventional ever seen in Paris. One of the most talked-of features of the function was a dance by Mrs. Hemmick, formerly Mrs. Alice Barney, whose marriage to her young husband created such widespread attention some months ago. Mrs. Hemmick, dressed as a Spanish dancing girl, exhibited her skill as a dancer in such agile fashion that few thought her to be the mother of the two girls who helped play the part of hostess.

A SWIFT BIRD

The Mexican road runner has only two short legs, but he can beat a horse, a hound, and an electric carriage, and give them a handicap start. Speed is not his only recommendation. He eats as he runs, or, rather as the things run away with him. Snakes are the principal part of his diet, big and little. His crop is as elastic as his legs are swift, and when he wants to prepare for a long journey he coils up a rattler or two inside of his neck and sets out across the Mexican desert with a swiftness that makes it look like a bunch of dust on a record-breaking tour around the world.

SMALLEST INHABITED ISLAND

The smallest inhabited island in the world is that on which the Eddystone Lighthouse stands. At low water it is 30 feet in diameter; at high water the lighthouse, whose diameter at the base is 28½ feet, completely covers it. It is inhabited by three persons. It lies nine miles off the Cornish coast, and fourteen miles south-west of Plymouth Breakwater. Flatholme an island in the British Channel, is only a mile and a half in circumference, but, consisting mostly of rich pasture land, supports a farmhouse, besides the lighthouse with a revolving light 165 feet above the sea.

A YOUNG SPENDTHRIFT

The Amazing Career of a Man Now Charged With Shoplifting

An amazing career of a man who is charged with shoplifting has been told to the Paris police. He is said to be a Baron, the son of a king long since dead and husband of a countess, from whom he is at present separated. The boy is described as having grown up with a liking for adventure, and was placed on board a ship, and travelled round the world for four years. He returned as independent as ever, and such a favorite, that a wealthy nobleman was delighted to give him his daughter in marriage, with a suitable fortune. After his marriage, however, the young Baron, it is stated, found life tedious in the old mediaeval castle, which was part of the dowry of his wife, and went to the great cities for adventure and amusement. He purchased horses and set up a splendid racing stable, but soon lost his taste for this sport and took to automobiling. His wife's fortune dwindled down to nothing, and he was reduced to all sorts of expedients, such as pawning jewels and furniture. His father-in-law became highly indignant, and took back his daughter, leaving the Baron only a paltry allowance per month. Hotel bills had been accumulating with surprising rapidity for the last eight months, and this, it is alleged, drove the son of a one-time king to the expedient of shoplifting. When the police entered his place they found an extraordinary variety of objects—entire suits by the dozen, any amount of linen, and more than 1,000 neckties, which, it seems, had been ordered from a number of shops, and the bills for which the Baron had been unable to settle. Since his arrest the shopkeepers have been sending the bills to the police authorities. There is only one hope, and that is that his wealthy father-in-law may come to the rescue.

THE SIZE OF RAINDROPS

Spencer C. Russel Gives the Details of His Experiments

Mr. Spencer C. Russel, at a meeting of the Royal Meteorological Society, London, described how he obtained records of the actual size of raindrops. He said the experiments had led him to conclude that the most satisfactory results were given by the use of plaster of paris or fine flour placed in 3-inch shallow trays to a depth of 1½ inches. Raindrops during six thunderstorms had been registered, yielding a total of 164 drops divided up into the following sizes: Twenty-five of 5 millimetres, 40 of 4 millimetres, 48 of 3 millimetres, 35 of 2 millimetres, and 15 of 1 millimetre. The largest drops occurred at the commencement of the storm, grading off as the storm progressed. Before a fall of hail a marked increase in drop size was apparent. Grouping the drops collected, independent of rain type, he arrived at the following distribution in sizes: Two hundred and fifty-seven of 2 millimetres, 222 of 3 millimetres, 175 of 1 millimetre, 107 less than 1 millimetre, 73 of 4 millimetres, 44 of 5 millimetres, and 7 of 6 millimetres.

AERIAL NAVIGATION

The Minister of Public Works, France, is Framing Regulations

The Minister of Public Works, M. Charles Dumone, Paris, is framing a code of laws for governing aerial navigation in France. Amongst other things it is stipulated that aerial pilots, in addition to the certificate of efficiency, must also be in possession of a permit, to be granted by the local administrative authorities, before beginning an aerial flight. No aviation meeting, to which the public is invited, can be held without first obtaining the necessary authority. A special garage or anchoring ground will, where possible, be set apart in the vicinity of large cities or towns, and aviators must descend there. As far as possible, flights above crowded thoroughfares must be avoided. Aviators coming from foreign countries must immediately, on descending, give notice of their arrival to the local municipal authorities. Flights above certain fortified zones are to be forbidden.

POISONED BY PASTRY

More than fifty people have been badly poisoned in France by some cakes and pastry sold by one of the best pastry cooks in the town of Caubral. One of his customers is dead, and many of the others are seriously ill. The pastry-cook cannot give any explanation. He has handed over the contents of his shop to the authorities, who are having his wares analysed, and his only theory is that his goods have been poisoned by some unknown person who wanted to ruin him. The pastry-cook appears to be above suspicion.

HOW SOME FOLK SUCCEED

Pilphalter, the druggist, was making hay even while it was only the electric lamp outside his shop that shone. He had just filled a bottle with a farthing's worth of rhubarb and half a pint of water, and labelled it "Our Half-Dollar Heartburn Cure," when a lady came in.

"I want a bottle of glycerine," she said.

"Yes," said the knight of the pestle, as he handed it across the counter. "That will be thirty cents—a quarter for the glycerine and a nickel for the bottle."

"But I had some here a Month ago," said the lady, "and I paid nothing for the bottle."

"Is that so?" said Pilphalter. "Then that will be thirty-five cents altogether."

READY FOR HIM

She made her first cake, and, wishing to "jolly" her, the husband winked at her brother, and said:

"Nice cake, dear. Are you sure, though, that you used baking-powder in it?"

"No," she said, as a little smile flickered around her mouth, "I didn't have baking-powder so I put in a substitute."

"Ah!" said the husband brightly. "And what was that?"

"Cement, dear," said the wife sweetly.

ARE STILL TALKING

Members at Ottawa Are Beginning to Leave, But End of Sitting Is Not Expected Until Wednesday or Thursday Next — Tom Wallace Rehashes Newmarket Canal and Moves Vote of Censure.

Ottawa, July 29.—There was little change yesterday in the condition of the dying Parliament. The obstructionists made further progress in the process of talking it to death, but indications still are that Sir Wilfrid will not give the word for final dissolution before Wednesday or Thursday next. Members are packing their grips for home and a considerable number on both sides have already left, though the numerical balance between the two parties is still preserved by the whips, in anticipation of several more votes on Opposition amendments next week.

But while the fifty or sixty members who left Ottawa Thursday night for their own constituencies are not officially relieved of their Parliamentary duties, the balance of the session is known to be so short that very few of them will return. The House late in the afternoon divided on the following motion, moved by Capt. Tom Wallace (Centre York), seconded by Major J. A. Currie (North Simcoe), that "while the growth and development of Canada demand an expenditure of public money, which shall at once be far-seeing, systematic and liberal every such expenditure ought to be designed and carried out in the public interest and not for partisan purposes or for the aggrandizement of party followers; this House regret that in many cases the Government have departed from this wholesome rule and principle and have used and supplied public monies for purposes that were not in the public interest."

Mr. Wallace reviewed the history of the Newmarket Canal project and read to the House the return recently tabled, in which Engineer E. J. Walsh scathingly condemned the wasteful extension of the canal plans, though the canal involved a large expenditure of money in his own county, the work was so indefensible that he could only condemn it.

Sir Alan Aylesworth characterized the discussion as an ancient and venerable one. The canal was started before 1904 and has been justified at two general elections since. There was as much agitation for it among Conservatives as Liberals of North York, and he dared Mr. Wallace to repeat in that constituency what he said in the House.

The building of the canal found a defender in the Minister of Finance, who quoted a newspaper account of a deputation which asked for the work in 1905. Many of the men on the deputation were, he said, Conservatives, one of them being T. H. Lennox, M.P.P. The Minister also thought Haughton Lennox had spoke in favor of the canal.

Haughton Lennox at once denied that he had ever done anything but condemn the canal project. He thought that his name had been confused with that the T. H. Lennox. The scheme, he declared, was a nefarious one.

Glen Campbell of Dauphin declared that more money had been spent in public works in the riding of a member lately unseated by the courts, than was spent in the whole of Manitoba.

A GRAND MEDICINE FOR OLD PEOPLE

"Fruit-a-tives" Restores The Health and Strength of Youth.

GRANDE LIGNE, QUE., Jan. 2nd, 1910.

"I heartily recommend "Fruit-a-tives" to all who suffer from constipation and the painful consequence, Piles. I am now over 80 years of age and suffered for more than 50 years with Constipation and Piles. I tried all kinds of remedies, but nothing cured me.

About four years ago, I received a sample of "Fruit-a-tives". After taking a few doses I felt that "Fruit-a-tives" were doing me good. As "Fruit-a-tives" were not sold here then, I wrote to Ottawa for several boxes.

After taking four boxes, I felt well—my Bowels were regular—and the Piles had disappeared". N. JOUBERT.

By taking one "Fruit-a-tives" tablet half an hour before meals—or one or two at night—old people can correct all Stomach, Liver and Kidney Troubles. "Fruit-a-tives" the famous fruit medicine is mild and gentle in action—pleasant to the taste—yet no other remedy has been found to be so effective in keeping old folks in good health.

accident mar the canal as a monument to the Laurier frauds on the country.

The Wallace motion was then put to the vote and killed by 79 to 45.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier at the opening of the House laid on the table the report of the conference between the Colonial Premiers and the Admiralty as to the status of Dominion navies.

Provision is made for dominion fleets to take part in fleet exercises with the British vessels.

The agreement provides for a uniform system of discipline and training, and for the exchange of seniority of colonial naval officers where their length of service is greater than that of British officers, on vessels co-operating with British ships. When in foreign waters the commander of a dominion ship will report to the British authorities and take his orders from the Admiralty.

The wording of the war clause is as follows: "In time of war, when the naval service of a dominion or any part thereof has been put at the disposal of the Imperial Government by the dominion authorities, the ships will form an integral part of the British fleet, and will remain under the control of the Admiralty during the continuance of the war."

Hon. Mackenzie King tabled a special report on comparative prices in Canada and the United States just prepared by the Department of Labor, dealing with the products in farm, forest and mine. "It is made up of actual market prices, week by week, for the past five years," the Minister said. It will be published as a report of the Department of Labor.

The House went into committee on ways and means, and the reciprocity debate was taken up by Major Beattie of London. Major Beattie vigorously opposed the Fielding agreement, and went on record as favoring a twenty per cent. increase in the tariff. He supported his argument for higher protection with copious citations from price records of the United States. He denied that higher tariffs meant necessarily higher prices to the consumer.

Stabbed By Burglar.

Kewatin, July 29.—R. H. Stewart, a local merchant, was dangerously stabbed by one of two burglars whom he surprised robbing his store Thursday night. After several shots were fired one of the desperadoes was captured.

On the Water Wagon.

Chatham, Ont., July 29.—Chatham's water wagons are no longer safe refuges for would-be abstainers. Yesterday morning temperance people were horrified to note that one of the corporation sprinklers carried advertisements for a well-known brewing company. With the civic slogan above, the sides and ends of the cart now hold the following classy legend: "See Chatham first," and "Drink Carlings' Canadian Club lager." Temperance people want to know if the chairman of the Board of Works is receiving remuneration for the advertising space taken on the wagon by the brewing company.

A Peculiar Case.

Chatham, July 29.—Thomas Cox was fined $20 in all yesterday for supplying liquor to an Indian liter named Joseph Houl. The case is a peculiar one. Cox claimed that he and a man named Fiedler bought a bottle of beer, of which they each had a drink. They left the remainder of the beer on a bench, where Houl afterwards found it and, without permission drank of it. The magistrate held that the negligence of Cox in leaving the liquor where the lister might find it constituted an offence. Mayor Brackin, solicitor for Cox, may appeal the case.

Ambassador Dropped Dead.

Paris, July 29.—Naoum Pasha, the Turkish ambassador to France, dropped dead last night at the Union Diplomats Club. Naoum entered the club, and, as was his custom, took a place at the card table. He was in the act of taking up a hand when he fell backward. The Duke de Rohan, the Roumanian Minister, and others immediately rushed to Naoum's aide, but he was beyond all aid.

ROYALISTS ELUSIVE

Republican Government Is Sending Troops to the Galician Frontier to Meet the Threatened Inroad, But the Mountain Valleys Are Difficult of Access and Monarchist Forces Keep Moving.

Lisbon, July 29.—Col. Barretto, the Minister of War, is preparing to leave for the north to visit the frontier camps and discuss the actual situation with the commanders of the Republican troops. Another squadron of cavalry was detached from the local garrison and sent northward yesterday.

The Government continues energetic representations to Spain against Galicia being made the monarchist base of the military enterprises against Portugal. The Spanish Government is supplied with a variety of information destined to support the effort to have Spain arrest the preparations and seize the arms and supplies of the monarchists. Spain replies in satisfactory terms, but thus far seemingly has been unable to intervene effectively in Galicia, which in many districts is difficult of access.

The Spanish local authorities are not in a position to interfere with the movements of quite individuals or to inquire their purpose. Capt. Couceiro and his principle adjutants of the monarchist forces are constantly changing their addresses. The whole countryside welcomes them as they buy freely and bring excitement into the dull valleys.

New Direct Cable.

London, July 29.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The text has been issued of the bill presented in the House of Commons by Rt. Hon. C. F. H. Hobhouse and Rt. Hon. J. A. Pease, the object of which is to extend the Pacific cable act.

The bill is a fulfillment of the promise made by Rt. Hon. H. L. Samuel, Postmaster-General to the conference on June 15.

The Australian Ministers complained that the Pacific board wanted to lay a new direct cable from Australia to New Zealand, which would give the board about £14,000 a year revenue, but the British Treasury refused to consent, because in future it might interfere with developments in connection with wireless telegraphy. Mr. Samuel, with Premier Asquith's concurrence, at once promised to press for the Treasury's consent, as it was the strong desire of Australia and New Zealand. This bill gives the desired authority.

Intercolonial to Double Track.

Montreal, July 29.—As the result of a tour of inspection the Intercolonial Railway system, the Board of management has decided to recommend the carrying out of considerable improvements all along the line. These will include double tracking in all leading points, notably the stretch from Chaudiere Junction to Levis, and the construction of subways alike in this province and further east, including St. Flavie in Quebec and Moncton in New Brunswick.

Sir Henry to Visit Kingston.

Kingston, July 29.—Sir Henry M. Pellatt will arrive in Kingston on Monday morning by steamer Toronto to attend the Kingston Old Boys' celebration. He will take part in the ceremony of unfurling the flag at Victoria Park on Monday morning.

Privy Council Case.

London, July 29.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Privy Council granted leave of appeal in the case of Guitremont v. Joyce, and Montreal Light, Heat & Power v. Gribble. The petition was dismissed with costs in Laidlaw v. Rhys.

Twenty Families Homeless.

Montreal, July 29.—Twenty families were driven from their homes yesterday morning when fire, which started in the sheds in the rear of Frontenac and Harbor streets, spread east and west to the houses situated on both sides.

So rapidly did the fire spread that many of the families were unable to save anything. How long they will have to remain without shelter is not known, and when asked, they could not say themselves, as few have any money and most of their belongings are destroyed.

As most of the families are Polish and ignorant of insurance, consequently they have nothing remaining in the world, save the few things they were able to snatch from the flames.

The total damage in property and household goods is estimated at about $20,000.

Killed His Neighbor.

Quebec, July 29.—Louis Dion, aged 25 years, was murdered at St. Honore, Temiscouata County, Thursday afternoon in the course of an altercation with a neighbor named Plourde. Plourde shot him through the neck with a rifle, and was arrested shortly after noon and lodged in jail at Fraserville. He states that he fired in self-defence.

Workman Falls to Death.

Toronto, July 29.—Apparently losing his balance while walking on a plank on the fifth floor of the unfinished section of the Kent building at Richmond and Yonge streets, yesterday morning, Robert O'Neill, 23 years a laborer, died of his injuries half an hour later in St. Michael's Hospital.

Cotton Mills Sold.

St. John, N.B., July 29.—It became known on the streets yesterday that the control of the cotton mills in St. John has passed over to the Dominion Cotton Co. with headquarters in Montreal, the latter company purchasing the capital stock at a price not made public. Work in the mills will be continued and probably improvements will be made for their more effective working.

William McLeod Washed Ashore on Hatch of Foundered John Irwin Tells of Wreck of Vessel—Member of Crew Was on Hatch With Him But Died Before Reaching Safety—Slept Under a Tree.

Halifax, N.S., July 29.—A despatch from Lingoldb, Guysboro County, at the eastern end of Nova Scotia, contains news of the loss of the steamer John Irvin. William McLeod, a Halifax man, one of those on board, came ashore at Marie Joseph on a hatch of the steamer.

The steamer John Irvin, owned by the Pugs Hood Coal Co., sailed for Halifax from Port Morien on Monday, coal laden, with a crew of eleven. Next morning at 3:15 she foundered, six miles off Beaver Light. At the time the sea was running mountain high with a heavy sea off shore. In the gale the cargo shifted badly, the ship listed, the water sweeping over everything. For two hours the pumps and in a moment it was evident the ship was doomed. The captain ordered the boats cleared, but before the covers could be cut, the steamer plunged under, head first, carrying all hands down with her. The second engineer, I believe, was washed below, and it is not believed he reached deck.

A moment later one of the hatches and their part of a bulkhead appeared, out of which McLeod constructed a raft. He picked up the cook who shared his raft with him. He also picked engineer on another of the hatches and spoke to him, and also saw Alex. McIntosh, one of the firemen, on some wreckage, but they soon disappeared. The terrible battering of the storm soon told on the cook and he lost heart, and, despite Mr. McLeod's repeated rescues, he was unable to save the unfortunate cook dying of exposure that evening.

Mr. McLeod drifted ashore at Eastern Red Head at the entrance to Lisconb Harbor between six and seven o'clock on Wednesday, in a state of utter exhaustion. He slept under a tree all night, and in the morning managed to make his way over the unbroken country to Abraham Francys at Marie Joseph, where he was cared for, and on the arrival of the Dufferin, he came to Sherbrooke.

Looking Over the Land.

Niagara Falls, Ont., July 29.—It is understood that Sir Donald Mann's visit here was prompted by a desire on the part of his syndicate to acquire the proposed Niagara, Welland and Lake Erie Railroad and the Welland Street Railway, and again look over the site proposed for the trans-Niagara bridge between the present upper and lower bridges. Mackenzie and Mann now control the electric lines on the frontier.

Cresswell Will Pitch To-day

Manager Quinlan of the Peterborough Midland League team, decided last night to use Stan Cresswell, the young south-paw pitcher, in the box against Cobourg in to-day's game in the Lakeshore town. Jimmy O'Hearne the second-baseman, is not yet home and Craig, who "subbed" for him last Saturday at the middle station, left to-day on his vacation, so that Manager Quinlan will have to preside over the destinies of No. 2 hamock himself, to-day. The team will be as follows: Gonter c., Cresswell p., M. O'Brien, 1st base; Quinlan 2b., Rahmel s.s.; Murphy 3b.; Shaw, l.f.; O'Brien c.f.; McFadden r.f., Phelan spare.

On account of the fact that from now on the regulars of the Peterborough team will be shattered by players being away on their holidays, there are openings for several players and all local ball-players, who wish to try for these vacancies, will be welcomed at the practises of the club at Riverside Park on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday nights of each week.

MARKET REPORTS.

Liverpool and Chicago Wheat Futures Close Higher—Live Stock—Latest Quotations.

LIVERPOOL, July 28.—Wheat—The market displayed a firm undertone at the start with values ¼c higher and following the opening further advanced ⅛d to ¼c. The persistent firmness in American, together with less favorable political outlook and the further decline in consols, caused shorts to become nervous and also encouraged speculative support. During the morning there was some little realizing on the larger Argentine shipments than expected and the fact that a local mill closed owing to labor trouble, and a generally quiet demand for both cargoes and parcels. Later the undertone again became firm on less favorable reports from India, and forecast of light world's shipments with a liberal decrease afloat to the United Kingdom.

CHICAGO, July 28.—Assertions that black rust in the wheat fields of the Dakotas and Minnesota had grounded down the probable yield there to barely 100,000,000 bushels brought about to-day a substantial advance in the market price. Latest trades were 1⅛ to 1⅛ higher than last night. Corn closed a shade off to ⅛ up, oats with a gain of ⅛ to 1 cent and provisions were more expensive by 2½ to 30 cents.

ARTIFICIAL EYES.

The Art of Making Them Resemble Their Human Patterns.

MATCH IN SHAPE AND COLOR.

They Fit the Eye Socket Perfectly and May Even Be Worn During Sleeping Hours—Made of Glass, For Which No Substitute Has Yet Been Found.

Germany leads all other countries in the manufacture of artificial eyes. The American consul general at Coburg relates that probably ever since the beginning of the world civilized people have endeavored to hide or remedy any flaw in their appearance, such as the loss of an eye would cause. How this was done by the various nations it is hard to say. Up to the present time no discoveries have been made that would offer enlightenment on this subject. There are, it is true, a few unauthenticated accounts as far back as the middle ages, but the first suitable report is given by the Spanish surgeon Ambroise Pare in 1550.

Two kinds of artificial eyes were known to him, the ekblepharon and the hypoblepharon. The ekblepharon was made by painting the eye and all surrounding parts as far as the brows on a plate, which was placed in front of the eye socket and held in position by a string tied over the head. The hypoblepharon was used in a manner similar to that of today, being put behind the eyelid, in the eye socket itself, and was composed of a metal shell of copper, silver or gold, covered with enamel and glass fusions.

It was only at the close of the eighteenth century that these artificial eyes really became of practical use, it being then found possible to do away with the metal shell altogether and employ enamel and glass. The material used was a soft lead glass, easily shaped, but also easily destructible, and an eye had to be renewed every three or four months to prevent the socket from becoming affected.

It is known that in the middle of the nineteenth century eyes were made by enamelers in Dresden, Prague, London and Stockholm, and in Thuringia. The Thuringian makers were not enamelers, but glassblowers working in connection with the porcelain painting industry, whose endless and untiring experiment resulted in the discovery of an ideal material, cryolite glass, the use of which led to a new technique in eye manufacture. Moreover, there can now be produced all the characteristics of the human eye which had been possible in enamel work. The new prosthetic eye received the name "reform eye." To be of value, however, it must be made to exactly fit the eye socket.

Today it is possible to give to the reform eye any form and color desired, and in most cases it can be even worn at night, thereby preventing the lid from sinking into the socket and the lashes from sticking together. At times attempts have been made to replace the breakable glass by vulcanite or celluloid, but such efforts have long since been given up as useless.

In 1832 the method used in France for making eyes was as follows: On the broadly pressed end of a small, colorless, transparent rod of enamel the pupil was first made, and the iris was then formed on this by means of a small, thin pointed, colored enameled rod, the designing of the iris being made possible by melting the point of this rod.

In Paris the good eyes are now so made. A glass tube, closed at one end and of the color of the sclerotic, is next blown into the form of an oval, and in the middle of this a hole is melted, the edges of which are rounded off evenly and pressed a little outward. The iris is then placed in this opening and well melted in. A thick coating of glass remains behind. The eye is rounded off, the projecting rim of the white coat is smoothed with a metal rod, and this coat is thereby joined to the sclerotic. By means of a thin, pointed red rod the blood vessels to be seen on the hard coat of the human eye are then melted in. The superfluous back part of the eyeball is melted off, thereby giving to the eye the desired form. The eye is finally placed on hot sand, where it becomes gradually cooled off.

Glass eyes are made in quite a different manner in Lauscha, the center of this industry in Germany, where their manufacture is altogether a house industry. The eyes are usually made by one member of a family, and the art is handed down from one generation to another. A gas flame is used for melting the glass. A small drop of white glass is put on the white blown ball from which the sclerotic is to be made and is then blown so as to make a circle about eight millimeters (0.315 inch) in diameter. On this circle the structure of the iris is built by means of variously colored glass rods. A drop of black glass makes the pupil. Over the finished iris crystal glass is melted in order to imitate the cornea. The further manufacture is similar to that given in the first description.

EXTREMISTS LANGUISH.

Ridicule Is Playing Havoc With "No Surrender" Group.

London, July 29.—A solution of the veto bill crisis without the creation of peers may be predicted to-day with tolerable certainty. Premier Asquith had a final interview yesterday with King George, who goes with Queen Mary to-day to Cowes for the week-end.

The no-surrender movement is dying of ridicule, its leaders not daring to publish the names of its alleged adherents. Lord Lansdowne, the leader of the Opposition in the House of Lords, on the other hand has received written pledges of support from over 300 peers in his efforts to save the bill.

The following is expected to be the course of events in connection with the veto bill: The House of Commons Wednesday, will reject the House of Lords' amendments to the bill, and meantime, the intimation will be conveyed to Premier Asquith that Viscount St. Aldwyn will take sufficient Unionist peers into the Government lobby, if the Halsburyites challenge a division, to outvote them. It is believed, however, that even this course will not be necessary, as it is very doubtful whether Lord Halsbury's following is equal in number to the Liberal peers in the House of Lords.

Suffrage a Success.

New York, July 29.—J. S. T. McGowan, Premier of New South Wales who arrived on the Mauretania, with Mrs. McGowan, said yesterday that the system of equal suffrage in the Australian province had operated most satisfactorily during the ten years it has been effective.

"A higher morality has resulted, he said, "and the home life, on which the vitality of any nation depends, has been strengthened. More women vote now than do men, and, contrary to much argument, the franchise does not unsex them. It makes our women more womanlike, and the result has been that there is a great decline in the infraction of laws, although the population has wonderfully increased."

Mrs. McGowan said that the women of New South Wales, while exercising their right to vote on all questions, were now more domestic than they were before they received the franchise.

C.P.R. Land Sales.

London, July 29.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—In the action of the C.P.R. v. C.P. Land Co., in the Chancery Division, Hodge, on behalf of the plaintiffs asked leave to serve short notice of motion on the defendants, restraining them from offering land for sale. He said they only knew of it on Tuesday from an advertisement. The plaintiffs complained that the advertisement induced the belief that it emanated from them. The plaintiffs had millions of acres of land for sale, and 500 agents in the United Kingdom alone. His lordship said he would give leave, but there was very little chance of its being disposed of this term.

Only Indirect Influence.

Brandon, Man., July 29.—The Grain Growers of Western Canada decided at a meeting here Thursday night that in the approaching election separate candidates will not be nominated for Parliament to represent that powerful agrarian society. Instead, a resolution was adopted, that members exert all their influence in the party with which they affiliate to have candidates nominated who have the same principles advocated by the grain growers. This decision is expected to govern the association in the three prairie provinces, though it is not necessarily binding.

Power From High Falls.

Kingston, July 29.—Ald. R. F. Elliott wrote to the Hydro-Electric Commission for information as to the possibilities of power from High Falls, and received a letter on Friday intimating that the commission is still working upon the matter, and that as soon as details are completed a report will be forwarded.

Forest Fires In California.

San Bernardino, Cal., July 29.—Despite desperate work of 400 fire-fighters and forest rangers, the fire on the San Bernardino Mountains, north of here, late yesterday leaped the fire breaks and crossed the summit of the range into the big timber. It is entirely out of control unless the wind stops.

Improvements In Armor Plate.

London, July 29.—It is stated that experiments on the Government firing grounds, with armor plate made of molybdonum used in alloy, with nickel in steel, proved it to be from 15 to 20-piece superior to the recognized armor plate standard in resistance to supercalibre projectiles. The Admiralty is said to have refused the discovery.

Soo Hotel Sold.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., July 29.—The International Hotel, the Soo's first hostelry, was sold yesterday by J. J. Garrick to a syndicate, compromising F. K. S. Martin, F. W. Stibbs, W. A. Pullock, T. J. Wilcox and J. B. Padee, all Soo men. The price is $100,000 and the syndicate will take over the management on August 1.

Determined to Drown.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., July 29.—Matt Kortainox, Finlander, aged 35, committed suicide yesterday afternoon by jumping into the river. He had trouble with his wife, who worked at a local hotel, and had been drinking for two weeks. When found he had a stone weighing six pounds in his pocket.

That Reform Not Necessary.

"What you want to do is to have that mudhole in the road fixed," said the visitor.

"That goes to show," replied Farmer Corntossel, "how little you reformers understand local conditions. I've purty nigh paid off a mortgage with the money I made haulin' automobiles out o' that mudhole."—Christian Register.

To Automobilists.

We've a surplus of hornless noises
That jar us by day and by night.
If we saw what he heard, say, our cosies
Would certainly be out of sight.
So why don't the motorcar owners,
Whom every foot passenger scorns,
Do something to lessen the noises
And give us a few noiseless horns?
—New York Tribune

The Personal View.

Teacher—Our investigations along sociological lines have brought us into contact with the statement that fewer women marry than in earlier times. What have you to say regarding this fact, Miss Jones?

Miss Jones—Why, it's true in my own case.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

I'd like to be a suffragette,
I'd like to cast my vote
To put good men in office, yet
It sort o' gets my goat
To think while standing there in line
I'd hear—oh, cruel fate!—
Some cat behind me sneer and say,
"Her back hair's not on straight!"

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

Japan and Russia are at loggerheads over the seizure of a Japanese sealing vessel.

Dr. Bruce Smith held an investigation at Barrie jail into the escape of a prisoner.

Fire sufferers in the Townships of Hanmer and Capreol, north of Sudbury, are in great distress.

E. M. Shepard, a well-known Brooklyn lawyer and independent Democrat, is dying at Lake George, N.Y.

A Cabinet reshuffle, with several retirements, may follow the passage of the veto bill in the British Parliament.

The text of the agreement for the co-operation of the Imperial and colonial navies was brought down in Parliament.

Robert Eaton of Hungerford was found dead by his daughter. It is supposed he was killed by his horses running away.

The Canadian Bisley team sailed for home to-day and, while some of the team have deferred their departure, the majority are expected home by the end of next week.

Jules Vedrines, the French aviator, who won the Paris to Madrid race, announced his intention of competing for the American prize offered for a flight from New York to San Francisco.

If a majority of the delegates to the Comox-Atlin, B.C., Conservative convention, held here Thursday night, have their way Premier McBride will be asked to accept the nomination to represent this district at Ottawa.

Passengers and mails from the steamer Empress of China, which lies grounded off the eastern coast of Japan, have been transferred from the ship to Yokohama. It is said in some quarters that the vessel will be a total loss.

New City Hall for Montreal.

Montreal, July 29.—The city architects have a scheme for a new city hall of a size and importance worthy of Greater Montreal, and the approval of the Board of Control will enable them to set to work at once with the plans. The projected city hall will be one of the finest municipal edifices in America. Its cost is roughly estimated at $10,000,000, and it would take from ten to twenty years to complete.

It has been long felt that the present city hall was wholly inadequate for the city, and with the prospect of a city of a million people within ten years a new and imposing civic structure must be built.

The scheme which is under contemplation now is to have the new city hall erected in the square bounded by Mount Royal avenue, Rachel avenue, St. Denis and St. Lawrence boulevards. This would be equally near the east and west ends, and would be within reach of the tremendous population, which is spreading behind the mountain, and along the Riviere des Prairies.

To Keep the Peace.

Madrid, July 29.—Premier Canalejas outlined last night the main features of the Franco-Spanish modus vivendi entered into in order to prevent clashes in the vicinity of Alcazar, Morocco, between Moorish troops, commanded or uncommanded by French instructors, and Spanish troops.

The agreement defines a line around the city of their own sides of which the Spanish and Moorish troops must keep. It also stipulates that diplomats and officers passing through the Alcazar region on their way to Fez are entitled to carry arms and have a small escort, but that ordinary travelers shall require a special passport. In addition Spain agrees not to enlist deserters from the Moorish army for police duty.

Premier Canalejas announced that instructions in accordance with the modus vivendi have been forwarded to Spanish commanders in Morocco.

Will Get Chest of Silver.

Toronto, July 29.—The civic reception committee will likely have their testimony of appreciation to Private Clifford take the form of a cabinet of silver cutlery. It is not regarded as advisable to attempt to procure him a house and lot, as it is feared that after the enthusiasm of the reception has evaporated, it will be difficult to raise a big enough balance of money by public subscription.

Ald. Maguire, chairman of the reception committee is arranging for an automobile parade to accompany the winner of the King's prize from Lansdowne Junction, where he will likely detrain, by arrangement, down Yonge street to Queen and west to University avenue, and then to Queen's Park, where the presentation will be made.

Will Plead Justification.

Vankleek Hill, July 29.—The preliminary hearing of the action of Judge Constantineau, senior judge of Prescott and Russell Counties against Editor Jones of Vankleek Hill for criminal libel was called before Gauthier, J.P., in L'Original yesterday. The magistrate formally committed the editor for trial and released him on bail. The case will likely be called next September at the Assizes in L'Original. The defence intimated an intention of fighting the case out on its merits, and will likely plead justification in the public interest.

Severely Injured.

Kingston, July 29.—Victor Swaine, aged 18, son of John Swaine, Glenvale, was working with a dynamite cap yesterday morning and it exploded, blowing off the ends of his second and third fingers on his right hand and severely injuring his right eye. He was brought to Kingston General Hospital, where his injuries were dressed. It is feared that he will lose the right of his right eye.

A Bust Anyway.

Moterton Senior—You kept the car out rather late last evening, son. What delayed you?

Moterton Junior—Had a blowout, dad.

AGREEMENT EXPECTED

Unofficial Statement is to Effect That Agreement Will be Reached at Conference To-day

MOROCCAN QUESTION

Examiner Special.

LONDON, ENGLAND.—It was learned unofficially through the Foreign Office, that at a conference in Berlin today, it was expected an agreement would be concluded between France and Germany on the Moroccan question.

ASQUITH'S STATEMENT RELIEVES THE SITUATION

Examiner Special:

BERLIN, GERMANY.—The return of Emperor William to the capital has no effect upon Moroccan negotiations. Contrary to intimations in Paris papers, that he would change his Foreign Minister's policy, according to official statement, the Emperor has relieved the report on negotiations, but no details have been given out. It is said here that matters might have been critical had it not been for Asquith's statement in the House, that Great Britain was disinterested in the situation outside Morocco.

FRANK GRIRO CHARGED WITH MURDER

Special Wire to The Examiner.

TORONTO.—Inspector Duncan has been working on yesterday's Italian murder case, and, as a result, a warrant was issued at noon for the arrest of Frank Griro, aged 25. Griro has not been seen here since the shooting, and telegrams have been sent out broadcast. The dead man is now identified as Frank Sciarono.

CANOE UPSET, TWO MEN WENT OVER FALLS

Special Wire to The Examiner.

TOLEDO.—Details of the death of Carey B. Close, a Toledo banker, and two others, C. H. Vance and James Christains, a Swedish guide in Metagami river, Northern Ont., reached here. Close's canoe upset, and Vance and Christain went over the falls. Close was rescued, but died from shock.

MARCHING ON TEHERAN

TEHERAN, PERSIA, JULY 31.—The Ex-Shah Mohammad Ali Mirza left Astrabad yesterday with an overwhelming force, and is marching on Teheran. The government seems to be without power to suppress the anarchistic conditions prevailing throughout the country.

THE PRIME MINISTER TO THE ELECTORATE

Sir Wilfrid's Masterly Summing Up of the Reasons for Dissolution

THE PEOPLE ARE TO DECIDE

What Trade Agreement Means in Regard to Relations of Nations Concerned—Government Content to Accept People's Verdict.

OTTAWA, JULY 30.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in an address to the Canadian people, issued yesterday, after the dissolution of Parliament, places the issue before the electors, as follows:

"TO THE CANADIAN PEOPLE:

"At all times during the last forty years it has been the constant effort of all political parties in Canada to make with the United States an arrangement for the free exchange of natural products between the two countries.

"In 1854 Lord Elgin, on behalf of Canada and the Maritime Provinces, negotiated with the United States a treaty for that purpose, which lasted until 1866, and which, within the memory of many still alive, was of the greatest advantage. Ever since the termination of that treaty all public men of any prominence in Canada, whatever their differences on other questions, have been unanimous in the attempt to again secure this free exchange of natural products. Nor is this to be wondered at, seeing that in the industries of agriculture, fisheries, lumbering and mining Canada possesses advantages not enjoyed by any other country on earth, and that upon the markets secured for the products of these industries depends the growth of our manufacturing and commercial interests and the prosperity of all classes in the Dominion.

"The latest attempt of the Conservative party to that end was made by Sir John Macdonald himself, who dissolved Parliament in 1891 for the purpose of submitting to the electorate of Canada the expediency of his approaching again the American authorities for a renewal of the treaty of 1854.

"In 1893 the intention to obtain reciprocity with the United States, if possible, was made a prominent feature in the platform of the Liberal party, upon which that party attained power in 1896.

"After the present Government took office it renewed in vain this offer to the United States, but, meeting with no response, it declared that no further overtures of this nature would be made by Canada.

The United States' Offer.

Within the last twelve months the President of the United States sent to Ottawa two Commissioners from Washington for the purpose of opening negotiations looking toward the lowering of the tariff barriers which have hitherto stood in the way of freer exchange of commodities between Canada and the United States. These negotiations in January last culminated in an agreement between the two Governments, by which the duties of each country on such products might be lowered or altogether removed. This agreement was strenuously resisted in the United States by various interests on the alleged ground that it was all to the advantage of Canada and to the detriment of the other country, but the view that it was mutually advantageous to both countries finally prevailed in Congress, and the agreement stands to-day as an offer by the United States to Canada of that very measure of reciprocity which for more than forty years has engaged the earnest and constant efforts of every leading Canadian statesman.

The Opposition's Tactics.

"The present Conservative party in Parliament seeks absolutely to reverse the lifelong policy of its great leaders in the past, declaring that it will oppose to the bitter end the very principles enunciated by both Sir John Macdonald and Sir John Thompson in the last election addresses upon which each of these statesmen ever appealed to the Canadian people.

"Not content to debate this proposition upon its merits, the Conservative party in the House of Commons has adopted a system of organized and avowed obstruction to prevent any vote being taken in Parliament by which the opinion of your representatives there could be expressed.

"Day after day when the presiding officer has tried to put the question he has been met by dilatory motions, by endless speeches, by obstructive devices of every kind, each put forward on some specious pretext, but in reality nothing else than abuse of freedom of speech in Parliamentary debate.

"Such pretences are simply a clumsy attempt to give some colour to unwarranted and undignified obstruction.

"To overcome this obstruction, after a session which has already lasted eight months, would not only mean the continuation of the unseemly spectacle presented by the Opposition in the House of Commons since the resumption of its sittings on the 18th instant, but would also mean weeks and months of wasted time, and perhaps in the end the loss for this season to the Canadian producer of the free American market.

"In this condition of things it has seemed to his Excellency's advisers more in accordance with the dignity of Parliament, with the traditions of those British institutions which all true Canadians value so highly, and which the present Opposition degrade with such a light heart, with the best interests of the country as a whole, to remit the issue to the people themselves, so that the people themselves may judge between the Government and the Opposition, and declare whether they have changed their mind or whether they are still in favour of reciprocity in natural products, and whether they will or will not have the American market for the promising crop soon to be garnered in Canada.

"The issue, my fellow-countrymen, is in your hands, and to your decision his Majesty's Government in Canada are well content to leave it.

The Annexation Cry.

"It has been alleged by the Opposition that this agreement, if consummated, would imperil the connection with the Mother Country, and finally bring the annexation of Canada to the United States. It is impossible to treat such an argument with any kind of respect, if indeed it can be dignified with the name of argument, for if it has any meaning its meaning is that the people of Canada would be seduced from their allegiance by the prosperity to follow the larger flow of natural products from this country to the other. Indeed, the very reverse would be the natural consequence, for the experience of all ages abundantly testifies that trade ever is the most potent agency of peace, amity and mutual respect between nations.

"Nor is that all. This agreement, which in no way impairs our fiscal policy, which still maintains at the topmost the fecund principle of British preference, would further improve the friendly relations which now happily exist between this country and the Mother Country on the one hand, and the American Republic on the other hand, and which, it is hoped, may, at no distant day, eventuate into a general treaty of arbitration the effect of which would be to remove forever all possibilities of war between the great Empire of which we are proud to form a part, and the great nation which we are proud to have as neighbours.

Satisfied Customers

There is a notable increase in my business. I expect it from the class of work I am doing. I do not expect to get all the optical business in the city, any more than one shoe store could sell all the shoes, but my aim is to obtain patronage enough to keep me reasonably busy and to give such satisfaction that my optical parlors will be indelibly fixed in the minds of those who desire the best at moderate prices.

It is very gratifying to note that much of my patronage has come from parties who have been recommended to me by pleased customers. Hence I want more customers to please.

My business methods will never be of the catch penny variety. I want to give a dollar's worth for every dollar I receive, and when I know of any plan whereby I can give a better dollar's worth than I am now doing, I shall adopt that plan. COMING HOME TO ROOST.

Mr. Chas. Lewis Owen, M.P., East Northumberland is evidently suffering from the obstructionist tactics of his party colleagues—the chickens are coming home to roost. The following incident is related of a recent happening in the House:

"In a doleful voice Mr. Owen informed the House on Thursday that there were about two thousand men in his constituency engaged on public works. Only a part of supply had been voted. What did the Government propose to do about it? Chuckles loud and long greeted him from the Liberal side, for, of course, it was only Conservative tactics which prevented the granting of full supply, and a Conservative member is evidently the first one to be pinched in consequence.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who appreciated the humour of the situation, smilingly told him that Parliament was here to pass reciprocity. Six months had been spent in discussing it, and all information necessary to a vote should be on hand.

"As soon as we have that vote we shall go on with supply," the Premier said.

NOT IN THE CITY'S INTERESTS.

There can be no objection to again referring to the deficit of the by-laws submitted at the vote of the electors on Friday. While, as compared with other local industries, the industries asking a fixed assessment have been treated with something very like unfriendly discrimination, the great mistake is the attitude of the people towards encouragement of manufacturing industries. All will recognise to what extent the growth and development of Peterborough have been promoted by the industrial establishments we now have and have for some time possessed. And we all recognise that what the city needs is more manufacturing industries, if we are to grow, and not stand still. No doubt the census returns will show a sharp advance in the population of Peterborough. This is clearly due to to the influence, direct and indirect, of our manufacturing establishments. And it will be further recognised that the competition for the capture of industries is strong. Other towns and cities would be glad to secure the industries to which the ratepayers refused a fixed assessment, by an entire remission of taxation, besides other inducements. This competition is keen enough now, but it will become much more effective if the idea gets abroad that Peterborough is not prepared to deal liberally with manufacturing industries: we shall thereby be greatly handicapped in the pursuit of new additions to our agencies of development and growth as represented by manufacturing concerns. It is difficult to believe that the attitude assumed on Friday is the policy of the ratepayers. The voting was brought on at an unfortunate time—when a very large number of ratepayers qualified to vote on such by-laws, were absent, on their holidays, and in the midst of the popular struggle to meet the first instalment of municipal taxes. For these reasons the by-laws did not get what is called "a fair show." If the people have time to reconsider, and to take an unprejudiced view of the issues involved in the adoption of the by-laws the result might be different. and there might not be another declaration that we are not prepared to welcome manufacturers. There is no doubt a large public sentiment in the city in favour of a reasonable policy of protection for the manufacturers and producers of the country. A logical sequence of this is local cooperation; it does not seem consistent to favour a general law to assist manufacturing industries and at the same time to reject supplementary assistance such as the special circumstances warrant, and such as other towns and cities adopt in order to attract new industries.

NOW THE FIGHT IS ON.

Canada now faces a premature general election. The announcement was made in the House on Saturday that Parliament was, prorogued and dissolved ;and that the nominations in the general election would be held on September 14th and the polling on Thursday, September 21st. Thus we have, for the first time in the history of Confederation, the minority ruling the majority on any great question — the minority using, or rather abusing, the rules of the House, to obstruct public business and prevent the voting of supply—in a word, making administration of the people's affairs impossible, and forcing a dissolution of parliament and necessarily a general election. In the ordinary course, the present, or rather late, parliament had more than another year to run—as a matter of fact it would not expire by effluxion of time, till Oct. 26th, 1913. The premature election is forced upon the country by the obstructive tactics of the opposition. To gain a party advantage, the Conservative opposition, deliberately took steps to prevent a vote upon the question of the reciprocity agreement. Thus they have made the reciprocity agreement the chief issue in the coming election, and in so doing have placed themselves in antagonism to a policy that has been that of both parties since Confederation. There is no need to test electoral opinion upon a subject which all parties in the past have been absolutely agreed upon. But there is reason to warn the election, that almost everything but the real issue will be forced upon their attention. We know that elaborate preparation is made to exploit to the full race and creed cries; we know that the bogus loyalty cry will be raised; we know, in fine, that a campaign of scandal, of insinuation and innuendo will be carried out. We know that the worst enemies of Canadian nationality will be at work raising issues that will tend to divide Canadian citizenship, into hostile camps. The opposition can in one sense hardly be blamed for this. They have no other policy to fall back upon. They have nothing in the way of policy to oppose the policy of the Liberal party, whose application has given Canada fifteen years of the most prosperous existence she has ever had. The only avowed policy of the opposition is hostility to a measure of tariff relief that promises to give a fresh impulse to trade and prosperity, and that is not a policy of conviction, but of party expediency. They know that a policy of enlarged trade and unhampered markets will win with the people, and hence their resort to side issues, slanders, discord-breeding questions, to divert public attention from the real issue. The time is short, and Liberals everywhere, and the friends of good government, are called upon to clear their minds of the prejudices so mischievously instilled, and to do so their duty by their country, by themselves, by the national interests they have to protect, by standing firmly for the good and progressive government which has made Canada a nation; prosperous and happy and fairly launched upon the highway of greater progress.

NO LACK OF BRITISH STATESMEN.

The scene of Thursday last in the British House of Commons was one of those that will live in history. It fell to Mr. Asquith, as Prime Minister, to play the leading part, but Mr. Balfour, playing one equally difficult, and hardly less distinguished, made a fitting second. Together they will move down the stream of history as foemen worthy of each others' steel, but always as brothers when the national interest is in danger, or the national honour is at stake

Mr. Asquith had previously informed the House of Commons that he would make on Thursday a statement on the Morocco question from the British point of view. He not only made it, but read it, as if to preclude all possibility of being misunderstood, misrepresented, or misquoted. Every word of the document was carefully studied; every sentence was made to say just what its author meant. Its purport was that Great Britain would stand by France in contentions with Germany over Morocco, and would also participate in the negotiations if her interests should be, at any point, threatened.

Mr. Balfour made it clear that however much the British people may differ among themselves over their own internal affairs, they will always stand united in support of any just foreign policy. This attitude was supported also by Mr. Ramsay Macdonald, who acts as leader of the Labourite contingent in the House of Commons. In fact, the Nationalists and Socialists were the only ones not heard from in the brief discussion.

There is a good deal of obscurity of course, as to what the France-Germany dispute is about, but generally speaking, it may be said to have reference to Germany's desire to secure a foothold in Morocco. To this Great Britain would not object so long as France is satisfied, even if the price paid for permission to control Morocco is the cession of some French territory to Germany in West Africa. That is at present, and must always, be a matter for the two States to settle, according to their own points of view, respectively

It is a difficult matter, however, with any proposal on the part of Germany to establish a naval station at Agadir. A naval station there would be protected by forts on land and by mines at sea. Swift German cruisers would be able from Agadir to prey almost at will on British commercial vessels that must be left unmolested. Such a naval station Britain cannot permit, and Germany must know that she will not. It is better every way that she should know it as soon and as definitely as possible; otherwise she would have good cause for complaint if she were left in the dark as to British policy until she had gone too far to recede without humiliation. The situation that is difficult now would, in that case, be impossible of peaceful solution.

It would be matter for deep and widespread regret should Great Britain and Germany go to war over a dispute of this sort. The question at once suggests itself why Germany should create such a disturbance in such a way. If she wanted to get anything in Morocco it was not necessary to send a warship there for the purpose. That looks dangerously like a challenge to France, Britain, and Russia. If it was really meant for a challenge it has been accepted; if it was meant for anything else the purpose should be made clear. There is too much dynamite around Morocco to make it safe to do any stamping there.

A LAKEFIELD CONSERVATIVE DECLARES FOR RECIPROCITY

Mr. J. F. Lillicrap, of Lakefield, contributes the following letter to the Globe, on Saturday:

To the Editor of the Globe,—In a letter to your paper, under date the 8th of March last, appearing on the same page, and framed in, as it were, with "Sir Wilfrid Laurier's Vindication," I stated my reasons for opposing a resolution at a Conservative meeting endorsing the action of the leader of the Conservative party and his following at Ottawa on the reciprocity question. I stated that self-respect would not permit me to vote with my party friends, and that I was very decidedly opposed to the annexation and disloyalty cry. This attitude was strongly emphasized in my letter above referred to, where I said that it was "a dishonest cry," and that, as a Canadian, I was ashamed of it. This letter was written early in the controversy, and before the Premier had spoken on the question. Several months have passed, and in the interval, as far as time would permit, I have read the different opinions expressed both in and out of Parliament, and compared the Opposition criticisms with the Government's proposals, and am more than ever convinced that, for once in thirty odd years, I must, on this question, to use a familiar expression, "cut loose" from my party.

I regret very much the position of the great Liberal-Conservative party on this question, and their determination to prevent the passing of the agreement, as I believe it is the duty of the party now in power at Ottawa, and who are responsible to the country for introducing this reciprocity measure, to keep faith with the Canadian people, and our American friends, by passing the agreement without an appeal to the country; and the Conservative party opposing it are disloyal to our constitution and their proper and dignified position as his Majesty's loyal Opposition, when they seek to force the will of the minority by obstruction such as we see reported from day to day.

Those who remember Canadian political life of twenty-five years ago may tell us that at that time men on both sides were ready to consider annexation or political union with the United States. Since then we have twice doubled our trade with the American people, and during that period Canadian national and Imperial spirit has steadily strengthened and increased, until to-day political union or annexation is never considered, and would not be granted for anything the Americans could offer. On the contrary, trading on equal terms will tend to increase the national and Imperial spirit, and the self-reliance and independence of the Canadian people.

J. F. Lillicrap,

Lakefield, July 27.

Another Man Who Regards Taxes As A Fine

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Dear Sir,—I am glad to see by the letter in your paper of last Wednesday that "Booster" has the courage of his convictions, in regard to taxing land values. But why do you put the heading on his letter, "Is there any reason for complaint?" Take an example: A certain man in Peterborough owns a house. Some time ago he was in a position to add some improvements to this house, whereby he employed labour and purchased necessary supplies. Following these improvements the Assessor increased his assessment by some $300. Will you not agree that this was an unfair action, and yet it was only one of many that are occuring in our city every year under our present system of taxation

The experience of those cities in the West who have adopted the modern method of taxing land values only and not improvements has demonstrated the truth of "Booster's" words

There are many advantages to be obtained in taxation of land only, and no real disadvantages

Had Peterborough adopted the system of taxing land values only the question of fixed assessment would not have been so important to industries seeking such an arrangement, and there would not have been the disappointment that must have been occasioned by the defeat of the two by-laws voted upon on Friday last.

Then, again, if taxes were based on land values only, there would be a more equitable distribution of taxes that would relieve many of what may now be considered a burden. An explanation given by some for the defeat of the Parks By-law is that the taxpayers feel they are already overburdened and do not want to add to their burdens. There is no doubt in the minds of those who have given the matter any kind of consideration that our city is in need of more breathing spaces, which need will become greater as our city grows. We, of modern times, are giving more attention to sanitary conditions and the care of our children. We must provide public playgrounds if we are to do our duty by our children and secure for future generations the vigour we owe them. But because of the feeling of burden, real or imginary, we turned down a by-law which, if carried, would have provided needed parks and playgrounds

I trust, Mr. Editor, that as a result of the introduction of this matter into your columns there may be a free and widespread discussion of this subject in Peterborough, not only amongst individuals and groups, but in a more public manner. I feel sure that if some public meetings were called to discuss this important subject every property-owner would make an effort to attend and take a hearty interest in the same

Very truly yours,

F. G. Hassard.

BRASS SCREEN UNVEILED AT ST. JOHN'S

An impressive ceremony took place in St. John's church on Saturday evening, when the handsome brass screen which surmounts the stone railing that flanks the entrance to the chancel, was unveiled. This beautiful specimen of the brass maker's art is placed in memory of the late Mr. and Mrs. James (Capt.) Wallis of "Merino", who for many years were constant and respected members of that church. A large assemblage witnessed the ceremony, at the conclusion of which Rev. Canon Davidson referred in appreciative terms to the lives of the two former members of St. John's congregation.

This ceremony will be of interest to the older residents of the city, to most of whom Captain Wallis and his wife were well known, and held in the very highest respect and esteem.

He had never read of anything to compare with it. The fictionists, as usual, were exceeded by fact. The whole thing was too preposterous to be true. He gnawed his mustache and smoked cigarette after cigarette. Satan, back from a prowl around the compound, ran up to him and touched his hand with a cold, damp nose. Sheldon caressed the animal's ears, then threw himself into a chair and laughed heartily. What would the Commissioner of the Solomons think? What would his people at home think? And in the one breath he was glad that the partnership had been effected and sorry that Joan Lackland had ever come to the Solomons. Then he went inside and looked at himself in a hand-mirror. He studied the reflection long and thoughtfully and wonderingly.

CHAPTER XIV.

THE MARTHA

They were deep in a game of Lilliards the next morning, after the eleven o'clock breakfast, when Viaburi entered and announced:

"Big fella schooner close up."

Even as he spoke, they heard the rumble of chain through hawse-pipe, and from the veranda saw a big black-painted schooner, swinging to her just-caught anchor.

"It's a Yankee," Joan cried. "See that bow! Look at that elliptical stern! Ah, I thought so—" as the Stars and Stripes fluttered to the masthead.

"Now what is an American vessel doing down here?" Joan asked. It's not a yacht, though I'll wager she can sail. Look! Her name! What is it?"

"Martha San Francisco," Sheldon read, looking through the telescope. It's the first Yankee I ever heard of in the Solomons. They are coming ashore, whoever they are. And, by Jove, look at those men at the oars. It's an all-white crew. Now what reason brings them here?"

"They're not proper sailors," Joan commented. "I'd be ashamed of a crew of black boys that pulled in such a fashion. Look at that fellow in the bow—the one just jumping out; he'd be more at home on a cow-pony."

The boat's crew scattered up and down the beach, ranging about with eager curiosity, while the two men who had sat in the sternsheets opened the gate and came up the path to the bungalow. One of them, a tall and slender man, was clad in white ducks that fitted him like a semi-military uniform. The other man, in nondescript garments that were both of the sea and shore and that must have been uncomfortably hot, slouched and shambled like an overgrown ape. To complete the illusion, his face seemed to sprout in all directions with a dense, bushy mass of red whiskers, while his eyes were small and sharp, and restless.

Sheldon, who had gone to the head of the steps, introduced them to Joan. The be-whiskered individual, who looked like a Scotchman, had the Teutonic name of Von Blix, and spoke with a strong American accent. The tall man in the well-fitting ducks, who gave the English name of Tudor—John Tudor—talked purely-enunciated English such as any cultured American would talk, save for the fact that it was most delicately and subtly touched by a faint German accent. Joan decided that she had been helped to identify the accent by the short German-looking mustache that did not conceal the mouth and his full red lips, which would have formed a Cupid's bow but for some harshness or severity of spirit that had moulded them masculinely.

Von Blix was rough and boorish, but Tudor was gracefully easy in everything he did, or looked, or said. His blue eyes sparkled and flashed, his clean-cut features were an index to his slightest shades of feeling and expression. He bubbled with enthusiasms, and his faintest smile or lightest laugh seemed spontaneous and genuine. But it was only occasionally, at first, that he spoke, for Von Blix told their story and stated their errand.

They were on a gold-hunting expedition. He was the leader, and Tudor was his lieutenant. All hands—and there were twenty-eight—were shareholders, in varying proportions, in the adventure. Several were sailors, but the large majority were miners, culled from all the camps from Mexico to the Arctic Ocean. It was the old and ever-untiring pursuit of gold, and they came to the Solomons to get it. Part of them, under the leadership of Tudor, were to go up the Balesumo, and penetrate the mountainous heart of Guadalcanar, while the Martha, under Von Blix, sailed away for Malaita to put through similar exploration.

"And so," said Von Blix, "for Mr. Tudor's expedition we must have some black boys. Can we get them from you?"

"Of course we will pay," Tudor broke in. "You have only to charge what you consider them worth. You pay them six pounds a year, don't you?"

"In the first place we can't spare them," Sheldon answered. "We are short of them on the plantation as it is."

"But—" Tudor asked quickly. "Then you are a firm or a partnership? I understood at Guvutu that you were alone, that you had lost your partner."

Sheldon inclined his head toward Joan, and as he spoke she felt that he had become a trifle stiff.

"Miss Lackland has become interested in the plantation since then. But to return to the boys. We can't spare them, and besides, they would be of little use. You couldn't get them to accompany you beyond Binu, which is a short day's work with the boats from here. They are Malaita men, and they are afraid of being eaten. They would desert you at the first opportunity. You could get the Binu men to accompany you another day's journey, through the grass lands, but at the first roll of the foothills look for them to turn back. They likewise are disinclined to being eaten."

"Is it as bad as that?" asked Von Blix.

"The interior of Guadalcanar has never been explored." Sheldon explained. "The Lashmen are as wild men as are to be found anywhere in the world to-day. I have never seen one. I have never seen a man who has seen one. They never come down to the coast, though their scouting parties occasionally eat a coast native who has wandered too far inland. Nobody knows anything about them. They don't even use tobacco—have never learned its use. The Austrian expedition—scientists, you know—got part way in before it was cut to pieces. The monument is up the beach there several miles. Only one man got back to the coast to tell the tale. And now you have all I or any other man knows of the inside of Guadalcanar."

"But gold—have you heard of gold?" Tudor asked impatiently. "Do you know anything about gold?"

Sheldon smiled, while the two visitors hung eagerly upon his words.

"You can go two miles up the Balesuma and wash colors from the gravel. I've done it often. There is gold undoubtedly back in the mountains."

Tudor and Von Blix looked triumphantly at each other.

"Old Wheatsheaf's yarn was true, then," Tudor said, and Von Blix nodded. "And if Malaita turns out as well—"

Tudor broke off and looked at Joan.

"It was the tale of this old beachcomber that brought us here," he explained. "Von Blix befriended him and was told the secret." He turned and addressed Sheldon. "I think we shall prove that white men have been through the heart of Guadalcanar long before the time of the Austrian expedition."

Sheldon shrugged his shoulders.

"We have never heard of it down here," he said simply. Then he addressed Von Blix. "As to the boys, you couldn't use them farther than Binu, and I'll lend you as many as you want as far as that. How many of your party are going, and how soon will you start?"

"Ten," said Tudor; "nine men and myself."

"And you should be able to start day after to-morrow," Von Blix said to him. "The boats should practically be knocked together this afternoon. To-morrow should see the outfit portioned and packed. As for the Martha, Mr. Sheldon, we'll rush the stuff ashore this afternoon and sail by sundown."

As the two men returned down the path to their boat, Sheldon regarded Joan quizzically.

"There's romance for you," he said, "and adventure—gold-hunting among the cannibals."

"A title for a book," she cried. "Or better yet, 'Gold-hunting Among the Head-hunters.' My! wouldn't it sell!"

"And now aren't you sorry you became a cocoanut planter?" he teased. "Think of investing in such an adventure."

"If I did," she retorted, "Von Blix couldn't be finicky about my joining in the cruise to Malaita."

"I don't doubt but what he would jump at it."

"What do you think of them?" she asked.

"Oh, old Von Blix is all right, a solid sort of chap in his fashion; but Tudor is flyaway—too much on the surface, you know. If it came to being wrecked on a desertt island, I'd prefer Von Blix."

"I don't quite understand," Joan objected. "What have you against Tudor?"

"You remember Browning's 'Last Duchess?'"

She nodded.

"Well, Tudor reminds me of her—"

"But she was delightful."

"So she was. But she was a woman. One expects something different from a man—more control, you know, more restraint, more deliberation. A man must be more solid, more solid and steady-going and less effervescent. A man of Tudor's type gets on my nerves. One demands more repose from a man."

Joan felt that she did not quite agree with his judgment; and, somehow, Sheldon caught her feeling and was disturbed. He remembered noting how her eyes had brightened as she talked with the newcomer—confound it all, was he getting jealous? he asked himself. Why shouldn't her eyes brighten? What concern was it of his?

A second boat had been lowered, and the outfit of the shore party was landed rapidly. A dozen of the crew put the knocked-down boats together on the beach. There were five of these craft—lean and narrow, with flaring sides, and remarkably long. Each was equipped with three paddles and several iron-shod poles.

"You chaps certainly seem to know river-work," Sheldon told one of the carpenters.

The man spat a mouthful of tobacco juice into the white sand, and answered:

"We use 'em in Alaska. They're modelled after the Yukon poling-boats, and you can bet your life they're crackerjacks. This creek'll be a snap alongside some of them Northern streams. Five hundred pounds in one of them boats an' two men can snake it along in a way that'd surprise you."

The Air Is Germ Laden

In the Springtime—Disease is Ready to Make You a Victim When the Blood is Thin

Rich, Red Blood is the Greatest of Germicides—You Can Get the Blood Right by Using

DR. CHASE'S NERVE FO

When the blood is rich and red, when it is largely composed of red corpuscles, there is little chance for disease germs. They cannot thrive in the system which is filled with good blood.

But in the spring the blood is generally thin, weak and watery. It lacks the vitalizing red corpuscles and you become an easy prey to the germs of disease which seem to lurk everywhere at this time of year.

You can fortify yourself against the germs of disease by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. This great restorative treatment forms new, red corpuscles in the blood, makes the blood rich, red and healthy.

Weakness, tired feelings, stomach derangements and disorders of the nervous system soon disappear when Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is used.

This medicine cures by the building-up process, and for this reason its benefits are lasting. Nearly everybody needs something in the spring to enrich the blood and tone up the system, and it would be impossible to get a more satisfactory spring tonic than Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. 50c. a box, 5 for $2.50, at all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

Keep the Children Well

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

THERE were already six ill assorted people—two distinct groups which had never met before—when three more people who were acquainted with but two of the orginal six came upon the verandah the other evening.

After the introductions had been made, someone spoke about the weather and we talked about that for the next five or six minutes, each generously contributing information regarding just how hot it had been on his particular thermometer and a few details on just how surprisingly well or wretchedly ill he had slept or eaten during the hot weather.

And then a silence fell.

One of those uncomfortable, squirmy, noisy silences during which each member of the company wonders why on earth someone else doesn't speak up and wildly searches his mind for something appropriate to say.

It lasted about twenty seconds by the clock. Measured by our discomfort, it seemed much nearer twenty minutes. Finally, it was broken by two people starting to speak at once.

Finding themselves in collision, each precipitately apologized, assured the other that what he was about to say was of no importance and tried to withdraw from the arena of public attention.

After much urging, one was finally prevailed upon to speak and contributed a remark which was of interest only to her particular group, comprising three people.

Now, what am I driving at with all this?

I don't wonder you ask.

Well, I'll tell you. I've used up so much space in describing this very commonplace little scene merely because it is so commonplace.

I don't believe there's a single person in my audience who hasn't taken part in such awkward silences.

And every time you are a participant, aren't you just cross at yourself?

I am.

I think every such silence is an accusation of abominable lack of social intelligence against those who permit it.

I think we all ought to have some definite stock topics which could be introduced in any group at any time no matter how ill assorted it may be.

There's always the weather, of course, and then there's the current play and the latest novel and the interesting piece of news in the day's paper—a mention of any of these things and a question as to your listeners' opinions upon it, will start a conversational ball a rolling which will probably go far before it stops.

Make up your mind that you will keep some such fund of topics as these on hand and don't be afraid to launch one of them whenever an awkward silence seems imminent and I assure you you will soon be beloved as the hostess friend.

AN INTERESTING CEREMONY PERFORMED BY BISHOP O'CONNOR

The Papers Representing the Indebtedness of St. Mary's Church Were Burned in the Presence of a Large Gathering---The Bishop Presented With an Address.

His Lordship Bishop O'Connor received a very hearty welcome to Campbellford on Thursday, where in the presence of a large gathering of the members of St. Mary's congregation and the citizens in general, assembled at the annual lawn social, he performed the ceremony of burning the mortgage, thereby declaring the splendid new church free from debt. Previous to the burning of the mortgage, the following address of welcome was read to the Bishop by Mr. D. J. Lynch, representing the congregation of St. Mary's:

To the Right Rev. R. A. O'Connor, D. D., Bishop of Peterborough:—

May it Please Your Lordship,—

We, the members of St. Mary's congregation, desire to express our very sincere thanks for your Lordship's presence here this evening, to celebrate with us one of the most important events in the history of our parish, viz., the burning of the mortgage.

The then disastrous fire of Christmas, 1900, left us without a church. Over its ruins was erected the present stone structure, which to many seemed then too heavy a burden for us, yet, under God's blessing, we have in a comparatively short time, removed this debt. This evening, at our annual lawn social, we are assembled to celebrate this event, and we ask your Lordship to be the one to burn the mortgage.

We hope in a short time to be able to decorate the interior of our church and then we can safely say that St. Mary's church, Campbellford, is second to none in the diocese.

Wishing your Lordship many years to continue your good work, and thanking you for your visit this evening, we are, your Lordship's humble children in Christ.

The following members of the clergy were present in addition to his Lordship, Right Rev. Bishop O'Connor, Rev. Fr. Whibbs and Rev. Fr. Casey of St. Mary's; Rev. Fr. Coty, Hamilton; Rev. Fr. Killeen, Picton; Rev. Fr. O'Sullivan, Port Hope; Rev. Fr. Kelly, Norwood; Rev. Fr. McFadden, Wooler; Rev. Fr. Phelan, Lakefield; Rev. Dr. O'Brien, Sacred Heart church, Peterborough; Rev. John O'Brien, St. Peter's Cathedral, Peterborough; Rev. Fr. Scanlon, Grafton; and Rev. Fr. Meehan, Belleville.

In his address, his Lordship the Bishop, complimented Fr. Whibbs on the results of his labours, and thanked, in an especial manner, the non-Catholics who contributed to the church fund.

C. G. E. BENEFIT SOCIETY'S EXCURSION TO COBOURG WAS AN ENJOYABLE ONE

A Large Number Took Advantage of the Occasion to Visit the Lakeshore Town---Baseball Game Was the Big Feature of the Day---Excursionists Were Accompanied by the 57th Band.

The Canadian General Electric Company's Benefit Society excursion, which was held on Saturday to the beautiful lakeshore town of Cobourg, proved to be an unqualified success. Seven coaches were required to convey the party, which, together with the able assistance of the Peterborough Midland League Baseball team simply took the town by storm. No mishaps of any kind arose to mar the pleasure of the outing, the credit of which may be given by unanimous choice to the executive committee, who had charge of the arrangements in connection with the event.

A special train, drawn by two miniature moguls of the Grand Trunk, left Peterborough at 1.30 p. m. Just prior to leaving, Jupiter Pluvius assumed a very threatening attitude, with the result that a number were deterred from going, who would otherwise probably have gone. A stop was made at Port Hope which was all too long, in view of the fact that several weak-kneeded youths, taking advantage of the proximity of the hotel, undertook to take on board more than they could carry and were unable to constrain themselves. After a hold-up of forty minutes the remainder of the trip was commenced, Cobourg being reached at 3.45 p.m. Here the party was met by a large contingent of rooters, who had turned out in a body to welcome the ball team. On arrival at the Park, the 57th Band, under the able leadership of Bandmaster Mr. R. Gliddon, took up an advantageous position, and gave several selections for the benefit of the crowd, and it also served as a stimulant to the highly inflated ambition of the Cobourg rooters.

It goes without saying that the big feature of the day was the ball game, a full report of which will be found elsewhere in these columns. The visiting team took a very lenient view of the measure of their opponents, with the result that they contented themselves with acquiring the small end of the score, much to the delight of the fan-atics, whose cheers fairly shook the besom of Lake Ontario. It was worth sacrificing the game to hear them. A good list of spirits had been prepared by the committee, but by the time the ball game was over it was time to beat it for the hash house, where full justice was done to the good things that were provided by the management of the British Hotel.

The remainder of the day, up to the time of departure, was spent in doing up the town, which, needless to say, was done in a very satisfactory manner.

The good citizens of Cobourg, especially the fair sex, turned out en masse, to see the closing scene of an enjoyable day's outing—the departure, and it was a tired, but satisfied crowd, that pulled into the Electric City shortly after 11 o'clock, Saturday evening. The following gentlemen composed the Committee: Chairman, W. S. Robinson; judges of games and sports, E. Anson, F. A. Shannon, W. Hill, R. E. Harding, J. A. Johnson, C. H. Campbell, J. Sanderson, T. J. Wilson.

Games and sports, J. H. Campbell and W. T. Edmondson.

THE MANY DUTIES OF A STONEY LAKE CAPTAIN

He Has To Be An Information Bureau, a Mail Clerk, a Buying Commissioner and Half a Dozen Other Things in Addition to Being a Navigator---Some of the Thousand Questions He is Called Upon to Answer.

Special Staff Correspondence.

STONEY LAKE, JULY 31.— You have all heard of the woman on the train with a pet dog who was very anxious about when they would reach a certain station. Every time the train would slow up she would flag the conductor and ask "Is this Smith ville now," and the man with the brass buttons and the punch would reply courteously, albeit somewhat wearily, "Not yet, I'll tell you when you are coming in." Finally the train slackened speed before reaching Smithville and the conductor remarked to the anxious passenger, "Here's your station now, lady. This is Smithville." "Oh, I don't want to get off here," was the somewhat surprising reply, "I just wanted to point out to Fido the town where his father was born."

An Examiner man coming up on Saturday afternoon, could not help thinking of that story as he listened to the running fire of questions that were hurled at Capt. Pat. Young during the afternoon. Certainly the lot of a Stoney Lake captain during the busy season is not exactly a bed of roses. When you add to the difficulty of piloting a steamer through the bewildering net work of islands and rocks that stud the surface of the lake and to the delicate work of making fully thirty landings, each presenting a little problem of its own, the task of answering a few hundred questions, some pertinent, some almost impertinent, you have not much time left over on a trip.

And yet, the captain of a Stoney Lake steamer, in addition to being a navigator, has to be an information bureau, a mail clerk, a buying commissioner and half a dozen other things, and yet preserve his courteous attitude to the public. That the captains invariably succeed in doing so is a matter that reflects great credit upon them.

Here are a few questions that are flung at them every day. "What time do we get to Viamede please?" "How many more stops before we come to Blank's Island?" "Do you go to Burleigh Falls before going to the east end?" "Whose is that cute little cottage over there with the red roof?" "Don't you remember me, I came up with you three years ago." "Can't you take me in before you go over to Mt. Julian?" "Does this boat stop at the store? Oh, it does. Will I have time to get off and get some souvenir post cards?" "How far is it to Burleigh Falls from here?" "Aren't we ever going to get to Eagle Mount?" and so on ad infinitum from the passengers.

Then as the boat draws in to a wharf you hear from the shore. "Oh, say, Capt., bring me up a can of minnows to-morrow, will you please?" or "I'm out of gasoline. Do you mind bringing me some up?" or "Will you please post these letters for me" or "If you see Blank in Lakefield, ask him why he didn't send that meat up?"

This kind of thing goes on all day and every day throughout the season. How the steamer men remember all these messages is more than the lay mind can comprehend. And every trip has some little variation in the difficulty line. A man bound for Mt. Julian goes to sleep, and as the steamer stops at Burleigh he wants to know if this is Mt. Julian, when he should have left the boat half an hour ago. And another man gets off the boat and forgets a parcel and the steamer has to go back in with it again.

In spite of it all, the courtesy of the Stoney Lake captains and crews is proverbial and they do everything in their power to make conditions comfortable and enjoyable for visitors.

A Splendid Opportunity To Secure An Education

When a grown person loses his sight, through accident or disease, he should be taught at once to read with his fingers. Sitting in darkness and idleness is enough to make any one despondent, but with the ability to read a book one can pass the time very comfortably. The task of learning to read occupies the mind and prevents the blind person from brooding over his misfortune. Having overcome the difficulty of learning to read without sight, the blind man gains faith in himself; he believes that he can do various kinds of work and with patience and determination he finds that his belief is justified. Earning money by his labour, he has the satisfaction of knowing himself to be a useful, independent member of society. At the Convention of the American Association of Workers for the Blind in Philadelphia in June, one of the delegates read a paper on Home Teaching of the Adult Blind. Mr. Gardiner, Principal of the Ontario Institution for the Education of the Blind, Brantford, in discussing the paper, pointed out that in a country of magnificent distances like Canada or the United States, it was not always practicable to send a special teacher to the home of the blind adult. He described a device of his own, by which any sighted reader of ordinary type can, without study or preparation, teach a blind person to read the raised characters known as New York Point; and on his return home he mailed to each of the delegates as had asked for them sets of the point cards and ink-type keys. He will be pleased to supply the same, free of charge, to anyone in Canada who may require them. In the case of blind children, or youths of either sex under twenty-one years of age, residents of Ontario it is better that the teaching should be done at the school maintained by the Government at Brantford. There an ordinary Public School education can be obtained, with the addition of knitting, sewing, domestic science, basket and hammock making, the use of carpenter's tools, music and piano-tuning for those qualified to succeed in any of these lines. The test for admission is such defective sight as renders the applicant unable to read ordinary type, and there is no charge for board, tuition or books. Any reader of the Examiner, who knows of a child whose sight is thus defective will confer a favour by sending the name of the child and the name and address of its parents to H. F. Gardiner, Principal O. I. B., Brantford, Ontario.

Popular Young Business Man Going West

The friends of Mr. Milton Blewett, of the Peterborough Hardware Company will regret to hear of his intention of leaving for Regina about the middle of August, where he intends to reside in future.

Since coming to Peterborough Mr. Blewett has made himself extremely popular in business, social and fraternal circles. He is an officer of the Peterborough Hardware Co., and has been with them since the organization of the present company. He is a Grand Lodge officer of the Knights of Pythias as well as an officer of the local lodge and has been instrumental in a large degree in placing Marathon lodge in the good position it now holds.

Altogether Mr. Blewett is the kind of young men the city does not care to lose. He should make his mark in the west to even greater extent than he has done here and no doubt will.

UNDERWENT OPERATION

The many friends of Mr. Harry Ellson, of Millbrook, will regret to learn that he has not recovered from the injuries he received last January when a spirited horse bolten and dragged him through the stable yard, causing a fracture of his right leg.

The injured member was set by Dr. Turner of Millbrook, but resisted all the efforts of medical skill to heal, and it was deemed necessary to perform an operation. Mr. Ellson was brought to the Nicholls Hospital on Thursday last and Drs. Halliday, city, and Turner, Millbrook, operated on the broken bone, with the result that the patient is doing as well as can be expected, and a speedy recovery is hoped for.

Y. M. C. A. CAMPERS HOME AFTER SPENDING ENJOYABLE VACATION

The Senior Y. M. C. A. boys have had a big time during their sojourn at Stoney Lake, where they have been "camping out" during the past two weeks. With sunburnt, red, radiant faces they gave us a short account of their doings, which are as follows:

The "Water Lily" left the Wolfe street wharf at 8.05 a.m. on Saturday July 15th, with "Sandy" Hall, "Dong" Loomis and "Bill" Hamilton on board arriving at Sandy Point at 11.45 a.m., and the Lakefield train took "Wind Jammer" Taite, "Indian" Irvine, "Tooth-pick" Hagerman, "Silent" Sanderson and "Fits" Fitzgerald, who paddled to Sandy Point, arriving before the "Water Lily." After dinner everybody paddled to Juniper Island, coming back late in the afternoon. "Whitren" Darling blew in o the Rob Roy about six o'clock and C. Nichols came in on the evening boat. We played football baseball and quoits before retiring.

On Monday, the 17th, we played basketball all the morning in the rain. In the afternoon we moved to Juniper, Hamilton and Darling reaching there by sailing and swimming, and Nicholls and Fitzgerald by towing a scow load of tent poles via the back channel. We lighted a camp fire at the point at night and Coon arrived in camp.

The next day we were all up at six o'clock and left for White Lake and the cave at eight o'clock. We shot the rapids at Indian River, landing at a farm house about a mile down. We walked four miles to Warminster cheese factory, where "Whiffes" got his all of curd and cheese. The cave was about 200 yards from the factory and its mouth was well hidden by a cluster of cedar trees. We went down about 99 feet 11 inches, (we wouldn't tell a lie for an inch) and were appalled by the frightful structure below. Then we looked for the potash kettle and started for camp.

Leaving our stopping place at Indian River we proceeded to swim, wade and paddle to White Lake again. At 7.30 p.m., we arrived in camp and didn't do a thing but eat and dress our wounds. Hamilton, Sr., was snoring like a bear in about five minutes and the rest of us were not long in following suit.

The 19th found us like a bunch of invalids and on popular vote we stayed in camp that day and wrote our love letters, etc. Bruce Hamilton arrived—an addition to the kindergarten. We went to Fairy Lake about 3 p.m. After supper you should have seen the "guys" tog up. Eight of the bunch paddled to Sherin's cottage, where there were some girls to entertain them. "Windjammer" Irvine got in alright and "Doug" Loomis was so excited that he fell through the wharf.

On the 20th we proceeded to make the course to Jack's Lake and visited Blue Mountain on the way, our progress being impeded by the presence of so many huckleberries. After supper we lit a fire and some of the fellows beat it to Crowe's Landing. Bruce Hamilton, in trying a fancy stunt, on the deck of the canoe, took a swim. Whiffen got "tied" over at the hotel. Irvine and Coon were the star fishermen of the day.

Next day, Friday, we struck for Bell's Creek. "Sandy" Hall actually landed a big 'lunge, about the size of his jackknife, and Fits and Nicholls repeated the trick. At the mouth of the creek we had dinner. A party from the camp gave chase to a porcupine and were human enough to let it go. After supper the campers went to Juniper Island store and pavilion and tried to sort out the Lakefield band, which came up on a moonlight.

On Saturday, the 22nd, we left for McCracken's for provisions, about 11 a.m. The bunch went to Mt. Julian in the afternoon to play ball with the Americans. When we reached Mt. Julian we found that the Americans had stopped playing ball and had gone out fishing, so we had a game amongst ourselves. We visited the shooting gallery before returning to camp. McCarrell came up on the late boat. We had another fire on the point that night.

The first thing we found on the morning of the 24th, was the rain coming down in torrents. We therefore stayed in. Some of the fellows went to McCracken's Landing to look for excitement, but they were disappointed. On account of the high wind and frequent showers the camp kept pretty much at home; at such a time as this, books were our only solace.

The next day was spent pretty much the same as that preceding it, and the weather acted likewise, delaying us in a proposed trip up the day was eating.

lakes. The most important act of to-

Up to 6 a. m. on the 26th, we prepared for a canoe trip to Buckhorn Lake. The weather was still doubtful. We started about 8 a.m., locked through Burleigh with the steamer "Lintonia" and proceeded to Lovesick. This is a dangerous place for young men, but we escaped and picked out our camping ground just below Buckhorn. In the afternoon we went to the famous city of Buckhorn. In the afternoon we went to the famous city of Buckhorn and viewed the sights. "Fits" Fitzgerald and "Toothpick" Hagerman landed a 'lunge. We explored Musseasuge River and came back to camp, to sleep among the thousands of mosquitoes stationed there.

On the 29th the camp was astir about 5 a.m., as a fishing expedition had been planned. At breakfast time the anglers came in with only one bass, caught by Taite, Messrs. McCarroll and Irwin left for the home camp before dinner. The rest of the bunch paddled home in the afternoon.

On Friday, the 28th, everybody was on the move at daybreak, as this was the day for breaking up camp. Irwin and Bill Hamilton sailed home and the rest got to their destinations in various ways.

On Sundays, of course, we went to church, in the morning, and in the evening held song service—round the camp fire.

On looking back we feel that we could not have had a better time.

The boys say the only objectionable time during their whole stay was the time of leaving. They maintain that the only ideal way of camping is to allow of no idleness. "Waste no time is their motto, and, judging from their little story they acted up to it.

FELL IN A FAINT

Mrs. Edwin Martin, Ayer's Cliff, Que., writes: "Before using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I was in a terrible condition. Dizzy spells would come over me and I would fall to the floor. I could not sweep without fainting. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has so built up my system that I can wash and do my housework. Your medicine cured me when doctors had failed."

Funeral Of Mrs. Robert Chambers

The funeral of the late Mrs. Robert Chambers of lot 23, concession 16, Otonabee, took place at the Little Lake cemetery yesterday at 2.30.

The attendance was large and the flowers which were both numerous and beautiful, denoted the esteem in which she was held by a large circle of friends.

The pallbearers were Jas. Chambers, Joshua Chambers, Robt. Wilson, G. Hanbridge, Wm. Whitfield and E. Deyell.

The Rev. J. R. Watts, who is at present acting at St. Andrew's, officiated.

The deceased, who was a member of the Presbyterian church, was born in Emily and lived from the time of her marriage until her death in the township of Otonabee..

Mrs. Chalmers, who was in her 50th year, was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Carroll, of Emily, who survive her, as also do four brothers, William of Fenelon Falls, Andrew, Benjamin and Joseph of Emily; and two sisters, Mrs. Little of Peterborough and Miss Boate of Emily.

She is also survived by a sorrowing husband and two daughters, Violet and Jennie.

TIRED-OUT KIDNEYS

Kidney troubles are so frightfully common because the kidneys are so easily upset by overwork or excesses of eating and drinking. Cure is effected not by whipping them on to renewed effort, but by awakening the action of liver and bowels by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. This rests the kidneys and makes them well. Backache and urinary disorders then disappear.

THE ANNUAL C.M.B.A. OUTING will be held on Tuesday, August 8th, per steamer Stoney Lake to Burleigh Falls and other points on the lake. Adults 50c, children 25c. Boat will leave Wolfe St Wharf at 8 a. m, Ashburnham wharf at 8.15 and Lift Lock at 8 30. Tickets on sale at Jos. Hickey's Shoe Store and at Le-Brun & Co's Clothing Store. 4d—31-Aug. 3-5-7

The main body will go to Bobcaygeon this week. For a number of years the Strathconas have camped at Pigeon Lake, immediately south of "Caygeon" and they invariably have a splendid outing, while the red and white sweaters are not entirely unknown to the people of John Smiff's pretty town.

A QUERY

At the request of a prominent citizen the following query is brought to the notice of the public at large, believing, as the writer does, that it voices the sentiments of a large number of the citizens:

EAST END REGATTA TO BE HELD AUG. 9th

Arrangements Are Being Made for This Much-Looked-Forward-To Event---Stoney Lake People Still Talking About the Stormy Weather of Last Week.

Special Staff Correspondence.

STONEY LAKE, JULY 31.—People at Stoney Lake are still talking about the storms they had at the beginning of last week and veteran cottagers here, say they never remember such a terrific wind. The gale lashed the lake into a terrible sea, in which no small boat would have been safe, and there was less travelling around last Monday and Tuesday than on any other two days in this or any other season. It was a case of stay at home and devise means of amusement that did not involve the use of a boat. The guests up at Bellevidere solved the problem by organising a hay rack ride, which proved a great success. For the last few days the weather has, however, been ideal, and the round of shore dinner and picnic parties has been resumed with its usual gayety.

Another big crowd of visitors arrived on Saturday, the Islinda making twenty-eight calls in the afternoon, while the usual Saturday night crowd was in evidence. Accommodation is limited at most of the hotels and boarding houses and the season may be said to be at its zenith now, although the invasion shows no signs of falling off.

The annual regatta of the upper Stoney Lake Cottagers and Campers' Association is announced for Wednesday, Aug. 9th on the course off Bellevidere. A capable committee has the affair in charge and the programme will be even more complete than last year, while the prizes will be correspondingly better. There will be the usual concert and dance in the evening.

Judge Hudspeth of New York, is here and has opened "Kawartha Lodge," his pretty summer home, for the season. Judge Hudspeth was not able to come to Canada last year and his friends are glad to welcome him this summer.

Mr. Ben Simpson, the well known Tiger football player, who has a cottage here, is spending a few days at Muskoka Lakes, where he is camping with some of his fellow Hamilton pedagogues. He will return to Stoney Lake to finish his vacation.

A number of Peterborough boys, including Ford Turner, Wm. Distin and Glad. Stone are occupying "Siberia" cottage ,near Jack's creek. Messrs. Charlie Ray and W. Taylor, of Peterborough were their guests for the week end.

Mr. J. B. McWilliams, who was in Toronto on business, returned to "Tecumseh Lodge" on Saturday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. J. U. McBain came up to Bona Vista on Saturday.

Mr. W. H. Meldrum has opened "Cairndhu."

Miss Muriel Burritt is the guest of the Misses Sanderson.

Mr. Norman Geale came up to Saints Rest on Saturday.

Mr. Colin Lee of the staff of Farm and Dairy, spent the week end at Stoney Lake.

Mr. H. B. Cowan, of "Farm and Dairy" is spending a few days at McCracken's Landing.

Mr. Felix Brownscombe came up to "Idleside" on Saturday afternoon.

Mr. Rich. Shelton spent the week end at his cottage near Burleigh.

Mr. D. H. Moore was one of the week end contingent on Saturday.

AT BURLEIGH FALLS.

Mine Host Darcy at the Burleigh Falls hotel, has had his house comparatively crowded all season, and reports a record business. Among the guests there at present are the members of an auto party which came all the way from Auburn, Indiana, to Burleigh Falls in two big six cylinder touring cars. Leaving Auburn on Tuesday last they spent Tuesday night at Detroit, Wednesday at London, Thursday night at Toronto and Friday night at Peterborough, coming on to Burleigh on Saturday. The party consists of Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Brown, Mr. and Mrs. H. B. McCord, Mr. and Mrs. M. Eckhardt, Mr. and Mrs. J. Schloss, Earl Parker and Ed. Lsepp.

Railway Construction Foreman Badly Beaten By The Men

LINDSAY, JULY 29.—The "standing room only" sign was hung out at the police court session last night, called for the purpose of dealing with an assault case, in which an Italian foreman with an unpronounceable name and Messrs. Joseph Lyewood and Chas. Crowley were the leading actors.

The court room was crowded to the doors, and the session lasted from 7.30 o'clock until eleven o'clock, when an adjournment was made until Monday at 7.30 o'clock. Mr. F. Holmes Hopkins appeared for the plaintiff and Mr. L. V. O'Connor for defendants.

The charge against Lyewood was assault, while Crowley was charged with assault and ocassioning actual bodily harm. The affair took place on the C. P. R. construction work on the farm of Mr. Jos. Meehan.

The complainant, who is foreman on the job, was the first witness. His face bore evidence of his having been mixed up in some sort of fracas. He spoke English fluently and told his story of the affray without any trouble.

It appears that the fracas started over an order given by the foreman that Lyewood put more earth into one of the scrapers when operating it. Lyewood wanted the fast team to haul in the loose gravel, as they were very spirited. The foreman said that if he could not do what he was told he could get off the job. Lyewood, he says, then called him an unprintable name, and he replied that he who would call him such a name must be one himself. This led to blows in which he claimed Lyewood led. The foreman took hold of Lyewood and downed him. A crowd then gathered round and he then let Lyewood up and told him to get off the job. Lyewood replied that he would not until the "walking boss" came round.

A fight then ensued in which the Italian was badly beaten up. The case was adjourned until Monday evening.

PEOPLE WILL DECIDE

Unique End to Eleventh Parliament of Canada—Nominations Sept. 14th

MR. BORDEN'S STATEMENT

Ottawa, July 31.—The Liberal Government decided at noon yesterday upon the immediate dissolution of Parliament. To a full conference of his Cabinet Sir Wilfrid Laurier announced the Governor-General had granted permission to appeal to the people on the reciprocity question.

The Ministry fixed upon September 14 as nomination day, with elections to follow one week later, September 21.

The decision, which has been trembling in the balance for the past two weeks, was reached after seeing that the Conservative opposition would block reciprocity indefinitely, and, as Sir Wilfrid announced repeatedly in Parliament, that the one matter before the House was the ratification of the Washington agreement, Government business was at a standstill. The Premier told his colleagues that the only way out of the present impasse was a general election, allowing the people to decide for or against reciprocity.

The Government made September 21 election day, as being the earliest possible date that would be convenient for western Canada. The Ministry was reluctant to bring on the elections before the harvesting movement had been completed.

By the compromise agreed upon between the Conservatives and the Liberals before the two months' adjournment to allow the Premier and Parliamentary contingent to attend the coronation of King George, the Government has supplies until September 1. Consequently, there will be but three weeks' interval after the money voted by Parliament is all expended, and for this short period the Minister of Finance can readily negotiate a temporary loan with the Bank of Montreal, as is customary.

One of the factors entering into the decision for immediately dissolving Parliament was the departure Friday night of some score of members, who announced that they would not return, despite the Speaker's adjournment until Monday only. It was feared that too few members would be left to carry on even the routine business. Knowing that elections were in the air, every member was anxious to get into his own constituency to make his calling and election sure.

A red hot campaign is now launched upon the Dominion, and, by agreement of both parties, reciprocity will be the war and only issue.

Mr. Borden's Statement.

Ottawa, July 31.—Mr. R. L. Borden, leader of the Opposition, gave out the following statement last night: "The dissolution of Parliament came as a great surprise to the supporters of the amendment. They evidently knew no more of the intention of the Government than they knew of the reciprocity agreement up to the 26th of January last. Apparently the Government decided upon dissolution in a hurry or even in a panic, as they gave no intimation to the many members on both sides of the House who are accustomed to spend the week-end with their families and who left their homes on Friday night without receiving the courtesy of notice.

"The Liberal-Conservative party welcomes an appeal to the people upon the great issue which has been under discussion in Parliament. The President of the United States has more than once emphasized the fact that Canada is to-day at the parting of the ways. Those two ways lead in very divergent directions. The choice of the people will be fraught with momentous consequences to the future destiny of this country. It is right and just that they should speak, because with them rests the ultimate decision."

Referring to the Oliver enquiry, he said: "It is a distinct breach of constitutional usage that Parliament should be dissolved while one of its committees is engaged in the investigation of charges which involved the honor of a Minister of the crown and the fate of the Government. Such a course constitutes an alarming and dangerous precedent which would not be tolerated in the Mother Country. It was the duty of the Government to clear up those charges before appealing to the people, and that could have been done in one week. Several witnesses summoned by the committee are in Ottawa to-day ready to give their evidence on Tuesday. The committee and all its powers of inquiry was wiped out of existence by the dissolution of Parliament. The course of the Government in deliberately burking this inquiry on the eve of an appeal to the people was an outrageous abuse of their power and manifested in a most striking manner their utter contempt of decent public opinion."

The Home and "The Sovereign"

The heating apparatus is always the most important equipment in a home. A good boiler makes a home comfortable to live in during the Winter, and easy to sell at any time.

Houses that are heated by "Sovereign" boilers are always in more demand than houses that are not—any person who has lived in a "Sovereign" house always wants to go back to a "Sovereign" house again.

Let us send you the names of some of your neighbors who live in houses heated by the "Sovereign" hot water boiler—they will tell you how you may make yourself more comfortable indoors this next Winter.

A PROOF OF KEEN CIVIC INDUSTRIAL COMPETITION

Peterborough's rival towns and cities are quick to take the hint given by the electors on Friday that Peterborough is not at all to retain its present manufacturing industries. Since the defeat of the by-law to fix the assessment of the Peterborough Lock Manufacturing Company, the Company has received telegrams from two different places, stating what terms the Company requires for removing from Peterborough.

EXCLUSIVE RIGHT

Mr. C. A. Primeau, optometrist has returned to the city after a two weeks' vacation in Toronto, Hamilton Niagara Falls and Buffalo.

While in Hamilton, Mr. Primeau secured from the Tait Optical Co. of that city the exclusive right for Peterborough of the new invisible Bi Toric lens. This lense, while possessing all the advantages of both the Bi Focal and Toric construction in clearness of vision and angle of view, is more economical in price than either, and can be fitted at a figure within the reach of everyone.

Mr. Primeau met several Peterborough boys during his vacation and spent an enjoyable time with them; they are all making good in their different undertakings, but have still a good word for their home town.

HOUSE-BREAKING AND NOT THEFT OF CHICKENS

It was reported in Saturday's issue of the Examiner that Bruce Roy had been released from the Central Prison on a ticket of leave by His Excellency the Governor-General. It stated that he had been sentenced to two years less one day by Magistrate Dumble on a charge of stealing chickens, when it should have stated that he was serving a term of six months on a charge of housebreaking, robbery and attempt at housebreaking. It will be remembered that he and two other young men from Montreal were sentenced to Central Prison at the same time, for breaking into the storehouse of W. Scott & Co., East City, and stealing a case of eggs. Other charges of theft were also against the prisoners. Roy, however, was lenigently dealt with on account of his youth, and was sentenced only to six months instead of two years as stated, and when released had only about three weeks more to spend in gaol. He was the young man, who, when arrested, had a revolver and ammunition in his possession.

Toronto Italian is the Victim of Daylight Outrage—Murderer Made His Escape

POLICE SEARCHING

Toronto, July 31.—A cold-blooded murder, done in broad daylight right at the corner of Church and Front streets—that was the tragedy which broke in upon the Sunday quietude of the down-town part of the city about four o'clock yesterday afternoon.

The victim was a young Italian named Tarro, 23 years of age, residing at 165 York street, who was shot and killed by bullets from a 38-calibre revolver of the Iver-Johnsen type.

A number of Italians, who were able to impart information, were rounded up very quickly and from them the detectives extracted much data which they hope will aid them greatly in the search for the missing man. Among those who were called to the City Hall was Frank Motto, the Police Court interpreter, and he learned from the other Italians that the deed was most probable committed by one of two men. A search was at once begun with the result that one of the two was not to be found.

It so happened that a police photo was obtained of one of the men mentioned, and this the two witnesses recognized as that of the man who escaped by way of the lane.

Both men were well dressed, the criminal being clad in a blue suit, Christie hat and tan boots. He is described as being about thirty years of age and standing five foot seven or eight inches and well developed.

The victim is a young man. He [illegible] bullet-pierced [illegible] where one of the bullets passed through, and on the right lapel, but slightly more towards the mid-line and a couple of inches lower, is a hole where the second bullet entered. The man's face was completely covered with blood, he having apparently rolled over on his face when he fell, after receiving the fatal shot.

The only eye-witnesses of the affray were two women, who were walking along Front street and had reached the west side of Church street, when the fatal scuffle began.

Apparently waiting for a car Tarro was standing at the northeast corner of Church and Front streets, when his assailant approached from the east side, took two or three steps in front of Tarro, turned around suddenly, and whipping two revolvers from his hip pockets fired four shots from one, dropped the other and then made his escape across Front street and down the lane twenty yards east of Church street, between Maclaren's warehouse and that of Lyman Bros. & Co. It was at first believed that the murderer had sought safety in the old cold-storage building down near the Esplanade, but the police failed to find him anywhere.

Several people stated that they saw a man answering the description given by the two women, who saw the shooting, run across the car tracks at the Esplanade and disappear in the direction of Yonge street.

At an early hour yesterday morning the entire staff of city detectives and Inspector Duncan, were searching for the murderer, believing they could identify him and that he was still within the city limits.

Six Fatal Accidents.

Montreal, July 31.—Six bodies lie at the morgue as the result of accidents Saturday and Sunday. A Syrian woman, who was known as Annie Mitchell, was burned to death as the result of a coal oil stove upsetting in her room on City Hall avenue Saturday night. She leaves one daughter.

The bodies of John Andrews, a married man of Pt. St. Charles, and Augustine Nelson of St. Timothe street, were found floating in the river on Saturday. The cause of their death is unknown and inquests will be held.

G. F. Watkins, an employe of McGill University was drowned while swimming at Sault Recollet. Harry Whibley, a Canadian Pacific yardman fell beneath the wheels of a train at Ontario and Morrow streets and was crushed to death yesterday and a similar fate met John Ashford, a young Scotchman, on the Grand Trunk tracks at St. Huber.

Life-Savers Rewarded.

Kingston, Ont., July 31.—The two cooks on the steamer Kingston, who cleared the lifeboats and rescued five persons, who had been captured from a sailboat, were rewarded with a presentation of $100. The purse was collected from passengers on the steamer, and the rescuers were given hearty cheers for their bravery.

Fire at Wyoming, Ont.

Wyoming, Ont., July 31.—Fire here Saturday morning destroyed the planing mill of W. J. Travis. The loss is only partially covered by insurance in the Lumber Insurance Co. of New York.

Not Sisters

Now and again you see two women passing down the street who look like sisters. You are astonished to learn that they are mother and daughter, and you realize that a woman at forty or forty-five ought to be at her finest and fairest. Why isn't it so?

The general health of women is so intimately associated with the local health of the essentially feminine organs that there can be no red cheeks and round form where there is female weakness.

Women who have suffered from this trouble have found prompt relief and cure in the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It gives vigor and vitality to the organs of womanhood. It clears the complexion, brightens the eyes and reddens the cheeks.

No alcohol, or habit-forming drugs is contained in "Favorite Prescription." Any sick woman may consult Dr. Pierce by letter, free. Every letter is held as sacredly confidential, and answered in a plain envelope. Address: World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R. V. Pierce, Pres., Buffalo, N.Y.

It has the full flavor—the rich, creamy deliciousness—of the finest Ales, without their heaviness and bitterness.

Owing to the great success of O'KEEFE'S Special Extra Mild Ale, other brewers are bringing out so-called "Special Ales" and labelling them as such. Of course, these Ales are said to be "just the same" or "just as good" as O'Keefe's.

LOCALS LOSE AT COBOURG BY NARROW MARGIN

Left-Hander Downes, of St. Mary's, Had the Indian Sign on Peterborough and Won a 6-5 Game

The re-organized Cobourg nine, with the veterans, Turpin, Floyd and Bulger worked as well as they ever worked, and Leo Downs, the good left-handed artist who wears a Saint Mary's uniform in Toronto every Saturday handing out a new brand of drops and spitters, defeated the locals by one run in the feature event of the C.G.E. sports on Saturday. It was a rattling good game from start to finish, and with the exception of the two first chapters, Quinlan had the visitors at his mercy. One of the largest crowds that ever assembled at Donegan Park was entertained to the king's taste, and showed unstinted and generous appreciation of the hair raising stunts pulled off. The local club carried about five hundred supporters, mostly C.G.E. employees, and the majority of them attended the game.

Four perfectly good runs were made off Quinny in the first innings and two came across in the second, while the Peterborough tallies were spread over the entire game, and every run was a hard earned one. The local's line-up did not include Right Fielder Craig, who is renewing acquaintances up at the lakes, or Jimmy O'Hearne the hard-hitting second baseman. Peter Campbell, of hockey and rugby fame played the middle cushion and handled everything in sight and convinced the natives of the lake shore town that in athletics he does not specialize, but has taken an honour course in every branch of fun. Doc. McFadden occupied Craig's position in the garden and had an easy day, nothing coming his way. The Cobourg nine received a bad scare in the concluding innings, but Downs' coolness saved the situation when scores seemed inevitable. The history in brief is as follows:

First Innings.

Murphy, first up for Peterborough, hit a liner to McKinnon, who threw him out at first. Shaw grounded to Downes and suffered the same fate at the initial sack. M. O'Brien struck out. No runs, no hits.

Bulger for Cobourg, hit between short and second and was out stealing home on Guy's hit over Murphy's head. Floyd hit between short and third and stealing second scored on Turpin's bunt, Turpin beating his hit to first. McKinnon walked and Turpin went to second. Bell flew out to Murphy and Turpin and McKinnon scored on Burge's two-bagger. Holnbeck walked, but Downes retired the side, Campbell to M. O'Brien. Five hits, four runs.

Second Innings.

Quinlan walked and advanced to second on Gonter's hit between Downes and Turpin. Campbell grounded to Guy who threw wide to second in an attempt to catch Gonter. Rahmel flew out to McKinnon who touched third for Gonter and threw to first for Campbell, thus retiring the side on a triple play. Two hits, one run.

Bulger hit to centre garden and advancing to second on a passed ball, scored when Guy hit to Murphy and got in the way of the ball at first, going to second while it was being recovered from the crowd. Floyd sacrificed to Quinlan, Guy taking third and scoring on a passed ball. Turpin flew to M. O'Brien and was an easy out Campbell to M. O'Brien. Two hits, two runs.

Third Innings.

McFadden was down McKinnon to Turpin. W. O'Brien smote the air and Murphy was out Guy to Turpin. No hits, no runs.

Bell dropped one before the plate and was out Gonter to M. O'Brien. Burge fanned and Holnbeck was down Rahmel to M. O'Brien. No hits, no runs.

Fourth Innings.

Shaw missed three, M. O'Brien was down Guy to Turpin and Quinlan, McKinnon to Turpin. No runs, no hits.

Downes drew a walk, but was out stealing second, Gonter to Rahmel. Bulger and Guy each struck out. No runs, no hits.

Fifth Innings.

Gonter hit to left and stole second and third, Campbell striking out. Rahmel drove a grounder at Guy and was thrown out to Turpin. McFadden sent a liner to McKinnon and was out at first, and Gonter, who had started for the plate before Downes delivered, claimed a run, but the protests of the Petes was not sustained. One hit, no runs.

Floyd reached first on Rahmel's wild throw to M. O'Brien and third on Quinlan's aeroplane peg to Campbell, Turpin flew out to Shaw and McKinnon walking to first, stole second. Bell fanned and Burge was out to Murphy on a fly. No hits, no runs.

Sixth Innings.

Murphy drove one at Turpin, too hot for that worthy to handle, but was out trying to reach third on Shaw's single when Turpin threw to McKinnon. M. O'Brien flew out to Guy. Two hits, no runs.

Holnbeck missed three, and Gonter, dropping the third threw him out to M. O'Brien. Downes also fanned. Bulger singled to centr egarden, but the side was again retired when Guy dropped a bunt and was out Gonter to M. O'Brien. One hit, no runs.

Seventh Innings.

Quinlan hit to centre and reached second on Turpin's wild peg, scoring when Holnbeck muffed Gonter's drive to right. Downes hit Campbell and Rahmel struck out, Campbell taking second and Gonter third. McFadden sacrificed, Guy to Turpin, Gonter coming home on the play. W. O'Brien fanned. One hit, two runs.

Downes came in on Floyd's high drive. Turpin singled along the third base line and stole second. McKinnon sacrificed, Quinlan to M. O'Brien and Turpin went to third. Bell fanned and Gonter dropping the third strike, caught him at third. One hit, no runs.

Eighth Innings.

Murphy drew a walk and stealing second, tallied on Shaw's hit to left field. O'Brien laid down a sacrifice bunt and Shaw went to third, but was down soon after in an attempt to reach the home plate, Quinlan struck out. One hit, one run.

Burge was out Quinlan to M. O'Brien. Holnbeck hit to centre and got second on Gonter's wild peg. Downes flew out to W. O'Brien and Bulger was easy, Campbell to M. O'Brien. One hit, no runs.

Ninth Innings.

Gonter sent a liner to Turpin. Campbell got two sacks when Turpin's knees weakened and he missed "Peter's" drive. While Rahmel and McFadden were fanning a couple of timely passed balls brought Campbell home. No hits, one run.

Notes on the Game.

One of the largest and most interesting figures in the game was that of Richard Hackenschmidt Turpin. Dick was arrayed in an armless jersey and looked like the largest stock holder of a large beaf trust. He plays a good game of ball, both at the bat and on first, although Murphy and Gonter didn't like the way he bounced them off the bag. Dick probably thought he was playing hockey against Armstrong and company of Trenton.

Bulger hit the ball right on the seam on three different occasions. Pitcher Quinlan has always had profound respect for the Cobourg vets.

Shaw made the feature catch in the field, when he tore in after a low drive and picked one off his left ankle support.

Owing to the fact that Donegan park is public property the fans are not forced to pay admission. The Cobourg treasurer reports that there are a few dead ones down there, too.

Ernie Rahmel had a bit of hard luck in his hitting. The first time up he hit the ball hard enough to make a circuit, but it was straight at McKinnon, who pulled off a double play unassisted and then heaved the pill over to Turpin who helped to make a triple.

The locals find it hard to hit against good pitchers. They received poor training at the beginning of the season against the weak box artists of the other Midland League teams.

Summary.

Two-base hit, Burge; sacrifice hits, Floyd, McKinnon, M. O'Brien, Rahmel, McFadden. Tripple plays, McKinnon to Turpin; hit by pitcher, by Downes, 1. (Campbell); bases on balls, off Downes, 2, off Quinlan 4; strike-outs, by Downes 11; by Quinlan, 7; left on bases, Peterborough 3, Cobourg 8. Umpire, Mr. Rosevear; time, 1.50.

WILL SIR HIBBERT TUPPER ENTER THE POLITICAL ARENA?

GERMAN EMPEROR'S YACHT WON

Special Wire to the Examiner.

COWES, JULY 31.—With royalty in attendance, Emperor William's yacht Meteor took the big class race today, and the German yacht Sophia won the Commodore's Interchallenge Cup. King Alfonso's Hispania was second in the latter event, with Alfonso on board.

Special to The Examiner.

ROME, JULY 31.—The Pope is very weak today after a fainting spell yesterday, but his condition is not considered critical, say official reports.

LUCRATIVE POSITIONS

It is generally conceded that owing to the Chain of Seven Colleges, with which the Peterboro Business College is connected, that its graduates get the choice positions. Many young men who graduated two years ago are now receiving from $1000 to $3000 per year, young women from $60 to $110 per month. The Peterboro Business College is one of the largest schools in the Province, and the demand for its graduates is many times its supply. Mr. Spotton has solved the life problem for thousands and placed them on the "High road to success," and he is in a better position than ever to do the same for you. You will be welcomed at any of his town or city schools. We understand that he trained twelve hundred students last year, and anticipates a large increase during the incoming year. It would be well for young people to get his advice; if you are not adapted for commercial pursuits he will frankly tell you.

A COMPLIMENT FOR PETERBORO' STREETS

Two automobile parties from Albany, New York, were in Peterborough on Saturday. They did us the honour to say that the city streets were the worst roads they encountered between Albany and Peterborough. And no city on the continent has better natural facilities for good roads than this very city—soil that gives perfect drainage and with abundance of the best of street material at hand.

BISHOP FALLON WILL BE HERE WEDNESDAY

At the golden jubilee of Bishop O'Connor, which will take place on Wednesday next, August 2nd, Pontifical High Mass will be celebrated at 9.30 by His Lordship, at which the sermon will be preached by Bishop Fallon, of London.

Bishop Fallon is recognized as one of the foremost Catholic orators in Canada, and a delightful address is anticipated. After the mass a presentation and address will be made by the priests of the diocese, followed by a presentation and address by the lay people of the diocese. At eight o'clock Bishop O'Connor will hold a reception on the lawn of St. Peter's Cathedral. At this reception a large assembly is anticipated. Many visitors from all parts are expected, and the 57th Band will be in attendance.

All citizens are invited to be present.

Japanese Premier Has Resigned

Special to The Examiner.

TOKIO, JULY 31.—A news agency here says that Count Katsura has resigned as Premier, and that he has recommended Marquis Saioji to that post. It is not believed that the change will affect the general policy of the government as Katsura is likely to continue as active head of affairs.

OBITUARY

The infant child of Mr. Joseph Panter, 128 Rubidge street, passed away last night after a brief illness.

The funeral took place this afternoon at 3.30 to Little Lake cemetery. Rev. Mr. Trumpour officiated.

MRS. JAMES CHALMERS.

At the ripe old age of 88 years, Mrs. James Chalmers passed away at noon to-day at the residence of her sister, Mrs. Thomas Hutchinson, of 578 Stewart street.

Mrs. Chalmers is an old resident of Peterborough. Born in Port Hope, she some time afterwards came to Peterborough, and, excepting a few years spent at Young's Point, has resided in this city upwards of 60 years. She was a constant attendant at the Murray St. Baptist church and through her kindly and charitable disposition won the hearts of a wide circle of friends. Her illness was only of short duration, as it is not more than ten days ago since she was walking in the city.

Deceased is survived by two sisters, Mrs. Hutchinson, above mentioned, and Mrs. Benjamin Matthews, of London street. She is also the stepmother of Mr. Geo. G. Chalmers, the employee agent and real estate man of this city.

The funeral notice will be given later.

USING OLD SLANDER

Word Goes Out to Opposition Press to Make Election Fight One of General Attack on the Administration

ATTACK HON. MR. OLIVER

Ottawa, Aug. 1.—Outside of the very evident and absolute confidence of the Liberals as compared with the frankly expressed doubt and hesitancy of the Conservatives in regard to the result of the coming election, the most marked development of the situation so far is the very palpable attempt of the Opposition to escape making reciprocity the real issue of the campaign, to drag in extraneous issues, and to run the fight along the usual lines of insinuation and scandal-mongering. Mr. Borden's election manifesto Sunday night, with its significant lack of emphasis on the reciprocity question and its over-emphasis on the insinuations against Hon. Mr. Oliver, is a first indication of this. The word went out yesterday to the Opposition press to make the whole administration of the Government the object of attack, and the old scandals which failed of making any impression on the country in the campaign of 1908 are to be vigorously re-exploited in the platform, press and party literature propaganda.

Murphy May Be Opposed.

Ottawa, Aug. 1.—Louis Cousineau, a Hull barrister, may run in the Nationalist interests in Wright County, in opposition to C. B. Major.

Hon. Charles Murphy may be opposed in the Russell Liberal convention by George McLaurin, an Ottawa barrister, who is a resident of the county. McLaurin was the Liberal nominee at the last general election, but stepped down to give the then new Secretary of State a safe seat.

Hon. Robert Rogers Undecided.

Montreal, Aug. 1.—Hon. Robert Rogers of Manitoba arrived in this city [illegible] and had a conversation with R. L. Borden in Ottawa. He intimated that he would shortly leave the provincial for the federal arena, and that if the Conservatives won the next elections he would be found on the Treasury benches. He stated that if the redistribution bill had been passed before dissolution he would have accepted a Manitoba nomination for Ottawa, but that at present he did not know exactly what position he would take. This depended largely upon the future conference with Premier Roblin. He will return to Manitoba immediately to take part in the Conservative conventions.

J. Nunan Will Oppose Paterson.

Brantford, Aug. 1.—Brantford Conservatives will nominate a candidate on Aug. 12 for the Dominion election. In all likelihood W. F. Cockshutt will be the choice of the party.

Rumor has it that Lloyd Harris, the sitting member, who strongly opposed the reciprocity pact, will receive the Liberal nomination.

In Brant constituency J. Nunan, a successful farmer, is slated to oppose Hon. William Paterson.

Abbey, the Painter, Dying.

Philadelphia, Aug. 1.—A cablegram received yesterday by his brother, William Abbey, states that Edwin A. Abbey, the painter, is dying in London. The message, which was sent from London, contained but two words, "Ed. dying." William Abbey, who is a resident of Mount Holly, N.J., but in business in Philadelphia, said yesterday that his brother had been ailing for some time.

Abbey's picture of the Coronation of King Edward was at Toronto Exhibition some five years ago.

London, Aug. 1.—Mrs. E. A. Abbey, wife of the painter, said yesterday that the condition of her husband, who has been in ill-health for some time, was very grave and caused great anxiety. Further than this she did not wish to discuss the illness.

Souvenir-Hunting Riot.

New York, Aug. 1.—Souvenir hunters nearly broke up the ceremonies that accompanied the beginning of work on the new subway yesterday. Workmen had loosened a little square of asphalt on Lexington avenue, under which the new line will run, and Public Service Commissioner Willcox was preparing to lift the first shovelful of earth with a silver spade when several thousand enthusiasts swept away the small police guard.

After the reserves had brought order out of the mob, the ceremony was continued, but the first earth was not lifted with a silver spade. It was scooped out of the hole by dozens of unofficial hands while the police fought to keep the city officers and others scheduled to perform the ceremony from being swept off their feet.

When the ceremonies began again the hole was several inches deep, while the crowd continued outside the police lines to scramble for the cubic foot or more of earth gathered by the more energetic of the souvenir hunters.

No arrests were made and nobody was badly hurt, although four women fainted and the police captain had the badge snatched from his cap, also as a souvenir.

Successful Leper Treatment.

Washington, Aug. 1.—So successful have been the operations of the American leper settlement on the Island of Celion in the Philippines, that the British Government has formally requested permission to transport to that place for treatment about forty lepers now at British North Borneo.

It will be impossible for this Government to grant the request, as the United States laws prohibiting the entry of such afflicted persons operates in the Philippines by special enactment.

Early Closing Figures.

Montreal, Aug. 1.—After a lengthy report was presented to the authorities yesterday when Chief of Police Campeau produced a document and statistics to show that since the laws for earlier closing of saloons went into effect, May 1; drunkenness had been far more prevalent in Montreal than ever before.

For example, figures for June, showed five times the number of cases of drunkenness calling for police intervention this June were double those requiring similar attention in June, 1910.

The blow was somewhat softened, however, by the statement that police cases in general had somewhat increased in number, and that this was doubtless due to the increase in the population of the city.

Whisky Put Him Bad.

Hamilton, Aug. 1.—Francis Pennington, a prominent member of the Wentworth Baptist Church, who, while under the influence of liquor, stole a number of small articles out of a department store here, was remanded for sentence yesterday after Rev. Mr. Quarrington and other church members pleaded for leniency.

The Crime Drama.

A thief I never chanced to meet,
But in all candor I will say
I'd sit up all night long to greet
One who possessed the charm complete

Thank You

My hearty thanks are due and are hereby tendered to the public of Peterborough for the very generous patronage received during my Opening Sale of the McWhinnie Stock, which closed yesterday.

So successful has this introduction sale been that the results have far exceeded my most sanguine expectations; and I appreciate this mark of confidence from the Peterborough public not only as an index of goodwill, but as serving to demonstrate how straightforward business methods will win public patronage.

Encouraged by this gratifying experience, the business will now go on in the regular way, with the determination of giving the public the very best shoe service.

TENSION LESSENS

At Dinner To-night the Lansdowne Faction Will Meet the Following of Lord Halsbury

VETO BILL CRISIS

London, Aug. 1.—The political crisis over the veto bill has undergone a slight modification, as the Cabinet yesterday decided to postpone the reappearance of the bill before the House of Commons until August 7.

Present anticipations point to the healing of the breach in the Unionist ranks. Lord Lansdowne and his followers, who favor the bill, and the Halsburyites, who are opposed to it, will meet to-night in full force at a complimentary dinner to the Unionist party's late whip, Sir Alexander Acksland Hood, who is now known as Lord St. Audries.

At this dinner Mr. Balfour, the leader of the Opposition, is expected to make a speech in an effort to pave the way for a modus vivendi between the opposing sections of the party. As a matter of fact both sides appear to be tending to this direction. Lord Willoughby de Broke, who is organizing the insurgents, yesterday for the first time admitted that his party had gained no accessions in strength.

Lord Lansdowne last night issued a letter discountenancing the idea of any Unionist peers voting in the Government lobby for the veto bill. This belated decision on the part of Lord Lansdowne probably means that he has secured sufficient support to make the Halsburyites powerless against the votes of the Liberal peers, and that therefore there is no longer any necessity for Viscount St. Aldwyn to come to the Government's assistance, as it was rumored he would do by taking into the Government lobby sufficient Unionist peers to out vote the Halsburyites in case they challenged a division.

That the tension has lessened is shown by the fact that King George has decided to remain at Cowes for [illegible] of the week. There is still a strong belief in the lobbies of Parliament, however, that Premier Asquith, in order to guard against uprises, will nominate a batch of about fifty peers before again trusting the veto bill to the House of Lords.

Fourteen Killed In Riot.

El Oro, State of Mexico, Aug. 1.—In repelling a mob of striking miners, who yesterday freed the prisoners in the jail, troops fired into the crowd, killing fourteen and wounding others.

More than 4,000 men representing the underground forces of the Mexico and La Esparanza mines, are out. If these men should be joined by those in El Oro, the number of strikers would number 7,000. They demand higher wages.

One hundred soldiers were sent from the state capital to El Oro yesterday afternoon. It is expected that 1,000 soldiers will be here to-day from the capital.

Ex-Shah Invades Persia.

Teheran, Persia, Aug. 1.—The Ex-Shah Mohammed Ali Mirza left Astrabad Sunday with an overwhelming force, and is now marching on Teheran. There is much apprehension here that the ex-Shah's attempt to regain the throne will succeed. The Government is without power to suppress the Anarchistic conditions which prevail throughout the country.

837 Children Died.

Montreal, Aug. 1.—For the month of July the total deaths numbered 1,175, and of these 837 deaths were those of children under five years of age, is the effect of a report presented yesterday at the City Hall. The health officials say that this showing is the worst in the history of the city.

Had Perilous Voyage.

Portland, Me., Aug. 1.—After three days' almost ceaseless work at the pumps to prevent their vessel from foundering, the crew of the little schooner J. Arthur Lord, brought their battered craft into this port late yesterday.

The schooner sailed from St. John for New York Thursday, with lumber. Her seams opened, the drinking water gave out and for two days the crew lived on only a few dried biscuits.

Conspiracy Charge Dismissed.

Ottawa, Aug. 1.—After a lengthy hearing yesterday the charge of conspiracy to defraud the Traders' Bank of $7,600 against W. H. McBeth and F. M. McKeown, was dismissed by the magistrate. The court, however, held the accused for trial on the charge of obtaining the money with intent to defraud.

100 Passengers In Peril.

Philadelphia, Aug. 1.—Carrying one hundred passengers, the steamboat Burlington, which left here last evening for Trenton, N.J., struck a rock in the Delaware River three miles below that place and sank.

The passengers, it is reported, were all safely landed.

Drought Closes Cotton Mills.

Charlotte, N.C., Aug. 1.—One hundred and fifty-two cotton mills in North and South Carolina shut down yesterday because of the drought.

Italian Who is Wanted for Daylight Outrage is Said to Have Been Tarro's Rival for a Woman

HAD QUARREL WITH TARRO

Toronto, Aug. 1.—A warrant has been issued for the arrest of Frank Griccio on a charge of murdering Frank Tarro at the corner of Front and Church streets on Sunday afternoon. Griccio for the past two years has lived with a young French woman named Rosa Brunet at 175 Jarvis street, who gave evidence at the inquest last evening to the effect that Griccio and Tarro had quarreled on more than one occasion, and that he carried a revolver of 38 calibre because he feared a man whom he did not like.

Griccio has been in the hands of the police before on a charge of having stolen property.

It is said that the trouble was due to money matters, and that Tarro was deeply in debt to the accused. Yet another story is to the effect that a woman is at the bottom of the case, and that Griccio and Tarro were rivals.

It appears that Tarro and Griccio set out from the restaurant on York street to meet in a duel, but changed their minds and returned to the boarding house good friends. They started out again, and the next heard of them at the York street house was that Tarro had been murdered.

So far there is no trace of Griccio, though fifty telegrams and pamphlets have been sent broadcast by the detective department. Word has been sent to nearly every place where it is thought the criminal might take refuge.

All last night the police and detective force was keeping a strict watch of the exits from the city and a constant watch has been kept on some Italian houses where it was thought the assassin might be concealed.

The disappearance of Griccio, the police believe, is good evidence against him. He has not appeared since the time he and Tarro left the restaurant in the afternoon, and yesterday morning Rosa Brunet set out in search of him. She called at the restaurant in York street, and the only reply given by the numerous men she enquired of was that he had not been seen. She returned to her room on Jarvis street and was not informed of the murder until a detective arrived in the afternoon and had her accompany him to Court street station.

"He (Griccio) always carried a revolver," said Rosa Brunet, at the inquest. He told me that there was one man in Toronto that he was afraid of, and that it was better to shoot him than to be shot. He was afraid that he would be after in the [illegible] the day."

About three weeks ago he had some words with Tarro, but nothing to fight about. After that the two were good friends. Tarro's brother was a particular friend of Griccio.

"I last saw Griccio about 11 o'clock Sunday morning," she stated. "He had been with me all night, and left me to go to an Italian restaurant at 169 York street, where he always ate. I always eat at an American restaurant. He was dressed in a blue suit, wearing a black Christie and tan shoes."

In response to a query from Mr. Monahan she stated that she did not know his present whereabouts. She had enquired at the Italian restaurants he patronized, but they had not seen him since Sunday noon.

Griccio had been a barber by trade, and for some time did odd days' work at 174 York street. On Friday he drew his money from the Imperial Bank, but the witness declared that she knew nothing of this.

Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, July 31.—The foreign demand for old crop spring wheat was fair, but no sales did here due to the past quarter higher than Sunday, they were still out of line with values here, and no new business was reported. The demand for oats for export account was good, but owing to the scarcity of ocean room from here for August exporters could not accept any of those. The local market for coarse grains was quiet and steady. A fair local trade is done in spring wheat flour, and the market is moderately active. The demand for bran and shorts is good, of which supplies are light and prices firm.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Union Stock Yards.

TORONTO, July 31.—The receipts of live stock at the Union Stock Yards were 157 cars, consisting of 2070 cattle, 1020 hogs, 1472 sheep and lambs, 109 calves and 35 horses.

Exporters.

E. L. Woodward bought for Swift & Co. 180 steers for Liverpool, 1280 lbs. each, at $5.97; also 263 steers for Liverpool, 1280 lbs. each, at $5.85.

Butchers.

Prime picked cattle, $5.90 to $6; good, $5.65 to $5.85; medium, $5.30 to $5.60; common, $5 to $5.25; cows, $3.50 to $5.

Milkers and Springers.

A limited number of milkers and springers were slow of sale at $40 to $65 each.

Veal Calves.

The market for veal calves was strong, at $4 to $8.75 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

Large receipts caused prices to be easier. Lambs sold at $7 to $7.75, and a few at $7.90. Canadian sheep sold at $4 to $4.90 for ewes. American yearling sheep sold at $5 to $5.50. See sales given.

Hogs.

The Swift Canadian Company quoted hogs at $7.75, fed and watered at the market.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, July 31.—At the Montreal Stock Yards west end market the receipts of live stock for the week ending July 29 were 3250 cattle, 1500 sheep and lambs, 2040 hogs and 1000 calves, and on the market this morning for sale were 1200 cattle, 600 sheep and lambs, 1950 hogs and 450 calves.

A feature of the trade was the first arrival of Canadian Northwest ranch cattle, there being over 200 head on the market. The quality was better than expected, after the long run. Altho the supply was much larger than it had been for some time past, the tone of the market was fairly steady, and prices show no important change, as compared with a week ago.

The gathering of buyers was large, and the demand was fairly good. A good clearance was made. A few choice steers sold at 6¼c, but the bulk of the trading was done in this class at 6c, while good stock brought 5¾c to 5¾c, fairly good 5c to 5¼c, fair 4¼c to 4¾c, and common 4c to 4¼c per pound.

The market for hogs on Sunday was strong, and prices showed an advance of 10c per 100 pounds. Sales of selected lots were made at $8 per 100 pounds, weighed off cars, but a weaker feeling developed in the market this morning, and prices declined 25c to 40c per 100 pounds. The demand was somewhat limited, and this helped to depress prices, and sales of selected lots were made at $7.50 to $7.75 per 100 pounds, weighed off cars.

The trade in small meats was fairly active, and, as supplies were not in excess of the requirements, prices ruled steady. Sheep sold at $4.50 to $5; lambs, at $6.75 to $7, and calves at $3 to $8 each, as to size and quality.

"ADVENTURE"

By JACK LONDON

At sunset the Martha broke out her anchor and got under way, dipping her flag and saluting with a bomb gun. The Union Jack ran up and down the staff, and Shelton replied with his brass signal cannon. The miners pitched their tents in the compound, and cooked on the beach, while Tudor dined with Joan and Sheldon.

Their guest seemed to have been everywhere and seen everything and met everybody, and, encouraged by Joan, his talk was largely upon his own adventures. He was an adventurer of adventures, and by his own account, had been born into adventure. Descended from old New England stock, his father a consul-general, he had been born in Germany, in which country he had received his early education and his accent. Then, still a boy, he had re-joined his father in Turkey, and accompanied him later to Persia, his father having been appointed Minister to that country.

Tudor had always been a wanderer, and with facile wit and quick vivid description, he leaped from episode and place to episode and place, relating his experiences seemingly, not because they were his, but for the sake of their bizarreness and uniqueness, for the unusual incident or the laughable situation. He had gone through South American revolutions, been a Rough Rider in Cuba, a scout in South Africa, a war correspondent in the Russo-Japanese war. He had mushed dogs in the Klondike, washed gold from the sands of Nome, and edited a newspaper in San Francisco. The President of the United States was his friend. He was equally at home in the clubs of London and the Continent, the Grand Hotel at Yokohama, and the selectors' shanties in the Never-Never country. He had shot big game in Siam, pearled in the Paumatus, visited Tolstoy, seen the Passion Play, and crossed the Andes on mule-back; while he was a living directory of the fever holes of West Africa.

Sheldon leaned back in his chair on the veranda, sipping his coffee and listening. In spite of himself he felt touch edby the charm of a man who had led so varied a life. And yet Sheldon was not comfortable. It seemed to him that the man addressed himself particularly to Joan. His words and smiles were directed impartially toward both of them, yet Sheldon was certain, had the two men of them been alone, that the conversation would have been along different lines. Tudor had seen the effect on Joan and deliberately continued the flow of reminiscence, netting her in the glamor of romance. Sheldon watched her rapt attention, listened to her spontaneous laughter, quick questions, and passing judgments, and felt grow within him the dawning consciousness that he loved her.

So he was very quiet and almost sad, though at times he was aware of a distinct irritation against his guest, and he even speculated as to what percentage of Tudor's tale was true and how any of it could be proved or disproved. In this connection, as if the scene had been prepared by a clever playwright, Utami came upon the veranda to report to Joan the capture of a crocodile in the trap they had made for her.

Tudor's face, illuminated by the match with which he was lighting his cigarette, caught Utami's eye, and Utami forgot to report to his mistress.

"Hello, Tudor," he said, with a familiarity that startled Sheldon.

The Polynesian's hand went out, and Tudor, shaking it, was staring into his face.

"Who is it?" he asked. "I can't see you."

"Utami."

"And who the dickens is Utami? Where did I ever meet you, my man?"

"You no forget the Huahine?" Utami chided. "Last time Huahine sail?"

Tudor gripped the Tahitian's hand a second time and shook it with genuine heartiness.

"There was only one kanaka who came out of the Huahine that last voyage, and that kanaka was Joe. The deuce take it, man, I'm glad to see you, though I never heard your new name before."

"Yes, everybody speak me Joe along the Huahine. Utami my name all the time, just the same."

"But what are you doing here?" Tudor asked, releasing the sailor's hand and leaning eagerly forward.

"Me sail along Missie Lackalanna her schooner Miele. We go Tahiti, Raiatea, Tahaa, Bora-Bora, Manua, Tutuila, Apia, Savaii, and Fiji islands—plenty Fiji islnds. Me stop along Missie Lackalanna in Solomons. Very soon she catch another schooner."

"He and I were the two survivors of the wreke of the Huahine," Tudor explained to the others. "Fifty-seven all told on board when we sailed from Huapa, and Joe and I were the only two that ever set foot on land again. Hurricane, you know, in the Paumotus. That was when I was after pearls."

"And you never told me, Utami, that you'd been wrecked in a hurricane," Joan said reproachfully.

"Me no t'ink nothing 't all," he said.

He half turned, as if to depart, by his manner indicating that he considered it time to go while yet he desired to remain.

"All right, Utami," Tudor said. "I'll see you in the morning and have a yarn."

"He saved my life, the beggar," Tudor explained, as the Tahitian strode away and with heavy softness of foot went down the steps. "Swim! I never met a better swimmer."

And thereat, solicited by Joan, Tudor narrated the wreck of the Huahine, while Sheldon smoked and pondered, and decided that whatever the man's shortcomings were, he was at least not a liar.

CHAPTER XV

A MATTER OF TRAINING

The days passed, and Tudor seemed loath to leave the hospitality of Berande. Everything was ready for the start, but he lingered on, spending much time in Joan's company and thereby increasing the dislike Sheldon had taken to him. He went swimming with her, in point of rashness exceeding her; and dynamited fish with her, diving among the hungry ground-sharks and contesting with them for possession of the stunned prey, until he earned the approval of the whole Tahitian crew. Arahu challenged him to tear a fish from a shark's jaws, leaving half to the shark and bringing the other half himself to the surface; and Tudor performed the feat, a flip from the sandpaper hide of the astonished shark scraping several inches of skin from his shoulder. And Joan was delighted, while Sheldon, looking on, realised that here was the hero of her adventure-dreams coming true. She did not care for love, but he felt that if ever she did love, it would be that sort of a man—"a man who exhibited," was his way of putting it.

He felt himself handicapped in the presence of Tudor, who had the gift of making a show of all his qualities. Sheldon knew himself for a brave man, wherefore he made no advertisement of the fact. He knew that just as readily as the other would he dive among ground-sharks to save a life, but in that fawg he could find no sanction for the foolhardy act of diving among sharks for the half of a fish. The difference between them was that he kept the curtain of his shop-window down. Life pulsed steadily and deep in him, and it was not his nature needlessly to agitate the surface so that the world could see the splash he was making. And the effect of the other's amazing exhibitions was to make him retreat more thickly than ever in the merceless, stoical calm of his race.

"You are so stupid the last few days," Joan complained to him. "One would think you were sick, or bilious, or something. You don't seem to have an idea in your head above black labor and cocoanuts. What is the matter?"

Sheldon smiled and beat a further retreat within himself, listening the while to Joan and Tudor propounding the theory of the strong arm by which the white man ordered life among the lesser breeds. As he listened, Sheldon realised, as by revelation, that that was precisely what he was doing. While they philosophised about it, he was living it, placing the strong hand of his race firmly on the shoulders of the lesser breeds that laboured on Berande or menaced it from afar. But why talk about it? he asked himself. It was sufficient to do it and be done with it.

He said as much, dryly and quietly, and found himself involved in a discussion, with Joan and Tudor siding against him, in which a more astounding charge than ever he had dreamed of was made against the very English control and reserve of which he was secretly proud.

"The Yankees talk a lot about what they do and have done," Tudor said, "and are looked down upon by the English as braggarts. But the Yankee is only a child. He does not know effectually how to brag. He talks about ity ,ou see. But the Englishman goes him one better by not talking about it. The Englishman's proverbial lack of bragging is a subtler form of brag after all. It is really clever, as you will agree."

"I never thought of it before," Joan cried. "Of course. An Englishman performs some terrifically heroic exploit, and is very modest and reserved, refuses to talk about it at all—and the effect is that by his silence he as much as says, 'I do things like this every day. It is as easy as rolling off a log. You ought to see the really heroic things I could do if they ever came my way. But this little thing, this little episode, really, don't you know, I fail to see anything in it remarkable or unusual.' As for me, if I wane up in a powder explosion or saved a hundred lives, I'd want all my friends to hear about it, and their friends as well. I'd be prouder than Lucifer over the affair. Confess, Mr. Sheldon, don't you feel proud down inside when you've done something daring or courageous?"

Sheldon nodded.

"Then," she pressed home the point, "isn't disguising that pride under a mask of careless indifference equivalent to telling a lie?"

"Yes, it is," he admitted. "But we tell similar lies every day. It is a matter of training, and the English are better trained, that is all. Your countrymen will be trained as well in time. As Mr. Tudor said, the Yankees are young."

"Thank goodness we haven't begun to tell such lies yet!" was Joan's ejaculation.

"Oh, but you have," Sheldon said quickly. "You were telling me a lie of that order only the other day. You remember when you were going up the lantern-halyards hand over hand? Your face was the personification of duplicity."

"It was no such thing."

"Pardon me a moment," he went on. "Your face was as calm and peaceful as though you were reclining in a steamer chair. To look at your face one would have inferred that carrying the weight of your body up a rope hand over hand was a very commonplace accomplishment, as easy as rolling off a log. And you needn't tell me, Miss Lackland, that you didn't make faces the first time you tried to climb a rope. But like any circus athlete, you trained yourself out of the face-making period. You trained your face to hide your feelings, to hide the exhausting effort your muscles were making. It was, to quote Mr. Tudor, a subtler exhibition of physical prowess. And that is all our English reserve is—a mere matter of training. Certainly we are proud inside of the things we do and have done—proud as Lucifer, yes, and prouder. But we have grown up and no longer talk about such things."

"I surrender," Joan cried. "You are not so stupid after all."

"Yes, you have us there," Tudor admitted. "But you wouldn't have had us if you hadn't broken your training rules."

"How do you mean?"

"By talking about it."

Joan clapped her hands in approval. Tudor lighted a fresh cigarette, while Sheldon sat on, imperturbably silent.

"He got you there," Joan challenged. "Why don't you crush him?"

"Really, I can't think of anything to say," Sheldon said. "I know my position is sound, and that is satisfactory enough."

"You might retort," she suggested, "that when an adult is with kindergarten children, he must descend to kindergarten idioms in order to make himself intelligible. That was why you broke training rules. It was the only way to make us children understand."

"You've deserted in the heat of the battle, Miss Lackland, and gone over to the enemy," Tudor said plaintively.

But she was not listening. Instead, she was looking intently across the compound and out to sea. They followed her gaze and saw a green light and the loom of a vessel's sails.

"I wonder if it's the Martha come back," Tudor hasarded.

"No, the sidelight is too low," Joan answered. "Besides, they've got the sweeps out. Don't you hear them? They wouldn't be sweeping a big vessel like the Martha."

"Besides, the Martha has a gasolene engine—twenty-five horse-power," Tudor added.

"Just the sort of a craft for us," Joan said wistfully to Sheldon. "I really must see if I cant' get a schooner with an engine. I might get a second-hand engine put in."

"That would mean the additional expense of an engineer's wages," he objected.

"But it would pay for itself by quicker passages," she argued. "And it would be as good as insurance. I know. I've knocked about amongst reefs myself. Besides, if you weren't so medieval, I could be skipper and save more than the engineer's wages."

He did not reply to her thrust, and she glanced at him. He was looking out over the water, and in the lantern light she noted the lines of his face—strong, stern, dogged, the mouth almost chaste but firmer and thinner-lipped than Tudor's. For the first time she realized the quality of his strength, the calm and quiet of it, its simple integrity and repose ful determination. She glanced quickly at Tudor on the other side of her. It was a handsomer face, one that was more immediately pleasing. But she did not like the mouth. It was made for kissing, and she abhorred kisses. This was not a deliberately achieved concept; it came to her in the form of a faint and vaguely intangible repulsion. For the moment she knew a fleeting doubt of the man. Perhaps Sheldon was right in his judgment of the other. She did not know, and it concerned her little; for boats, and the sea, and the things and happenings of the sea were of far more vital interest to her than men, and the next moment she was staring through the warm tropic darkness at the loom of the sails and the steady green of the moving sidelight, and listening eagerly to the click of the sweeps in the rowlocks. In her mind's eye she could see he straining naked forms of black men bending rythmically to the work, and somewhere on that strange deck she knew was the inevitable master-man, conning the vessel into its anchorage, peering at the dim tree line of the shore, judging the deceitful night distances, feeling on his cheek the first fans of the land breeze that was even then beginning to blow, weighing, thinking, measuring, gauging the score or more of ever shifting forces through which, by which, and in spite of which, he directed the steady equilibrium of his course. She knew it because she loved it, and she was alive to it as only a sailor could be.

Twice she heard the splash of the

NEAVE'S FOOD FOR INFANTS

Is the RIGHT FOOD for YOUR baby

The strongest argument for your using NEAVE'S FOOD for your baby, is that 80 years experience has proved its value for the youngest and most delicate infant. NEAVE'S FOOD contains all the essentials for flesh and bone forming in an exceptional degree—assists teething—relieves constipation—and makes baby thrive. Here's what one mother says:

"My baby has been brought up on Neave's Food, of which I cannot speak too highly. My baby did not thrive until I gave him Neave's Food, and he has never had a day's illness since. If anyone asks me what they shall give their babies, I say Neave's Food, and they get on just the same as mine, and thank me for telling them." Mrs. Savery of Bristol.

lead, and listened intently for the cry that followed. Once, a man's voice spoke, low, imperative, issuing an order, and she thrilled with the delight of it. It was only a direction to the man at the wheel to port his helm. She watched the slight altering of the course, and knew that it was for the purpose of enabling the flat-hauled sails to catch those first fans of the land breeze, and she waited for the same low voice to utter the one word "Steady!" And again she thrilled when it did utter it. Once more the lead splashed, and "eleven fadom" was the resulting cry. "Let go!" the low voice came to her through the darkness, followed by the purging rumble of the anchor-chain. The clicking of the sheaves in the blocks as the sails ran down, head-sails first, was music to her; and she detected on the instant the jamming of a jib downhaul and almost saw the impatient jerk with which the sailor must have cleared it. Nor did she take interest in the two men beside her, till both lights, red and green, came into view as the anchor checked the onward way.

Sheldon was wondering as to the identity of the craft, while Tudor persisted in believing it might be the Martha.

"It's the Minerva," Joan said decidedly.

"How do you know?" Sheldon asked, sceptical of her certitude.

"It's a ketch to begin with. And besides, I could tell anywhere the rattle of her main peak-blocks—they're too large for the halyard."

A dark figure crossed the compound diagonally from the beach gate where whoever it was had been watching the vessel.

"Is that you, Utami?" Joan called.

"No, Missie; me Matapuu," was the answer.

"What vessel is it?"

"Me t'ink Minerva."

Joan looked triumphantly at Sheldon, who bowed.

"If Matapuu says so, it must be so," he murmured.

"But when Joan Lackland says so, you doubt," she cried, "just as you doubt her ability as a skipper. But never mind, you'll be sorry some day for all your unkindness. There's the boat lowering now, and in five minutes we'll be shaking hands with Christian Young."

Lolaperu brought out the glasses and cigarettes, and the eternal whiskey and soda, and before the five minutes were past, the gate clicked and Christian Young, tawny and golden, gentle of voice, and look, and hand, came up the bungalow steps and joined them.

CHAPTER XVI.
THE GIRL WHO HAD NOT GROWN UP

News, as usual, Christian Young brought—news of the drinking at Guvutu where the men boasted that they drank between drinks; news of the new rifles adrift on Ysabel, of the latest murders on Malaita, of Tom Butler's sickness on Santa Ana: and last and most important, news that the Matambo had gone on a reef in the Shortlands and would be laid off one run for repairs.

"That means five weeks more before you can sail for Sydney," Sheldon said to Joan.

"And that we are losing precious time," she added ruefully.

"If you want to go to Sydney, the Upolu sails from Tulagi to-morrow afternoon," Young said.

"But I thought she was running recruits for the Germans in Samoa," she objected. "At any rate, I could catch her to Samoa and change at Apia to one of the Weir Line freighters. It's a long way around, but still it would save time."

"This time the Upola is going straight to Sydney," Young explained. "She's going to dry dock, you see; and you can catch her as late as five to-morrow afternoon—at least, so her first officer told me."

"But I've got to go to Guvutu first." Joan looked at the men with a whimsical expression. "I've some shopping to do. I can't wear these Berande curtains into Sydney. I must buy cloth at Guvutu and make myself a dress during the voyage down. I'll start immediately—in an hour. Laloperu, you bring 'm one fella Adamu Adam along me. Tell 'm that fella Ornfiri make 'm Kai-Kai take along whale-boat." She rose to her feet, looking at Sheldon. "And you, please, have the boys carry down the whale-boat—my boat, you know. I'll be off in an hour."

Both Sheldonan d Tudor looked at their watches.

"It's an all-night row," Sheldon said. "You might wait till morning—"

"And miss my shopping? No, thank you. Besides, the Upola is not a regular passenger steamer, and she is just as liable to sail ahead of time as on time. And from what I hear about those Guvutu sybarites, the best time to shop will be in the morning. And now you'll have to excuse me, for I've got to pack."

"I'll go over with you," Sheldon announced.

"Let me run you over in the Minerva," said Young.

She shook her head, laughingly.

"I'm going in the whale-boat. One would think, from all your solicitude, that I'd never been away from home before. You, Mr. Sheldon, as my partner, I cannot permit to desert Berande and your work out of a mistaken notion of courtesy. If you won't permit me to be skipper, I won't permit your gallivanting over the seas as a protector of young women who don't need protection. And as for you, Captain Young, you know very well that you just left Guvutu this morning, that you are bound for Marau, and that you said yourself that in two hours you are getting under way again."

"But may I not see you safely across?" Tudor asked, a pleading note in his voice that rasped on Sheldon's nerves.

"No, no, and again no," she cried. "You've all got your work to do, and so have I. I came to the Solomons to work, not to be escorted about like a doll. For that matter, here's my escort, and there are seven more like him."

Adamu Adam stood beside her, towering above the three white men. The clinging cotton undershirt he wore could not hide the bulge of his tremendous muscle.

"Look at his fist," said Tudor. "I'd hate to receive a punch from it."

"I don't blame you." Joan laughed reminiscently. "I saw him hit the captain of a Swedish bark on the beach at Leyuka, in the Fijis. It was the captain's fault. I saw it all myself, and it was splendid. Adamu only hit him once, and he broke the man's arm. You remember, Adamu?"

The big Tahitian smiled and nodded, his black eyes, soft and deer-like, seeming to give the lie to so belligerent a nature.

"We start in an hour in the whale-boat for Guvutu, big brother," Joan said to him. "Tell your brothers, all of them, so that they can get ready. We catch the Ppolu for Sydney. You will all come along, and sail back to the Solomons in the new schooner. Take your extra shirts and dungarees along. Plenty cold weather down there. Now run along, and tell them to hurry. Leave the guns behind. Turn them over to Mr. Sheldon. We won't need them."

"If you are really bent upon going—" Sheldon began.

"That's settled long ago," she answered shortly. "I'm going to pack now. But I'll tell you what you can do for me—issue some tobacco and other stuff they want to my men."

An hour later the three men had shaken hands with Joan down on the beach. She gave the signal, and the boats hoved off, six men at the oars, the seventh man for'ard, and Adamu Adam at the steering sweep. Joan was standing up in the sternsheets, reiterating her good-byes—a slim figure of a woman in the tight-fitting jacket she had worn ashore from the wreck, the long-barrelled Colt's revolver hanging from her loose belt around her waist, her clear-cut face like a boy's under the Stetson hat that failed to conceal the heavy masses of hair beneath.

"You'd better get into shelter," she called to them. "There's a big squall coming. And I hope you've got plenty of chain out. Captain Young. Good-by! Good-by, everybody!"

Her last words came out of the darkness, which wrapped itself solidly about the boat. Yet they continued to start into the blackness in the direction in which the boat had disappeared, listening to the steady click of the oars in the rowlocks until it faded away and ceased.

"She is only a girl," Christian Young said with slow solemnity. The discovery seemed to have been made on the spur of the moment. "She is only a girl," he repeated with greater solemnity.

"A dashed pretty one, and a good traveller," Tudor laughed. "She certainly has spunk, eh, Sheldon?"

"Yes, she is brave," was the reluctant answer; for Sheldon did not feel disposed to talk about her.

"That's the American of it," Tudor went on; "—push and go, and energy, and independence. What do you think, skipper?"

"I think she is young, very young, only a girl," replied the captain of the Minerva, continuing to stare into the blackness that hid the sea.

The blackness seemed suddenly to increase in density, and they stumbled up to the beach, feeling their way to the gate.

"Watch out for nuts." Sheldon warned, as the first blast of the squall shrieked through the palms. They joined hands and staggered up the path, with the ripe cocoanuts thudding in a monstrous rain all around them. They gained the veranda, where they sat in silence over their whiskey, each man staring straight out to sea where the wildly swinging riding-light of the Minerva could be seen in the lulls of the driving rain.

Somewhere out there, Sheldon reflected, was Joan Lackland, the girl who had not grown up, the woman good to look upon, with only a boy's mind and a boy's desires, leaving Berande amid storm and conflict in much the same manner that she had first arrived, in the sternsheets of her whale-boat. Adamu Adam steering her savage crew bending to the oars. And she was taking her Stetson hat with her, along with the cartridge belt and the long-barrelled revolver. He suddenly discovered an immense affection for those fripperies of hers at which he had secretly laughed when first he saw them. He became aware of the sentimental direction in which his fancy was leading him, and felt inclined to laugh. But he did not laugh. The next moment he was busy visioning the hat, and belt, and revolver. Undoubtedly this was love, he thought, and he felt a tiny glow of pride that the Solomons had not succeeded in killing all his sentiment.

An hour later, Christian Young stood up, knocked out his pipe, and prepared to go aboard and get under way.

ADVENTURES of the WORLD'S GREAT DETECTIVES

By George Barton

The Milk Punch Revenue Fraud-

An Episode in the Life of James J. Brooks, once Chief of the United States Secret Service.

COPYRIGHT 1911 BY W. G. CHAPMAN.

"HALT!" COMMANDED THE DETECTIVE.

THE CAN WAS FILLED WITH WHISKEY

(This is one of a new series of stories concerning adventures that have occurred in the lives of the world's greatest detectives. Mr. Barton has gathered his material from real life, but in some cases imaginary names have been substituted for real ones simply as a matter of justice to the innocent descendents of culprits mentioned in the narratives. Permissable liberties have been taken in the construction and arrangement of these short stories, but in all that is essential, they may be regarded as human documents of unusual interest and value.—The Editor.)

In the summer of 1866, Internal Revenue Commissioner Rollins summoned James J. Brooks to Washington. The officers of the government were greatly perplexed. Congress had placed the almost prohibitive tax of two dollars per gallon on whisky, and immediately illicit distilleries sprung up in all parts of the country. Commissioner Rollins very much desired to break up the illegal traffic, and he had selected Brooks as the man for the purpose. The interview between the two men was long and important.

"Brooks," said the commissioner, "the frauds connected with the production and removal of spirits are becoming alarming. Great public dissatisfaction has arisen from the failure to collect this tax. Besides it is ruining discipline in the service, and unless some remedy is obtained, I fear further demoralisation."

"Are the conditions as bad as that?"

"Worse! I have figures which show that 60 per cent. of the whisky reported made and warehoused has been sold without payment of the revenue tax. Such extensive fraud is not possible without the knowledge of responsible revenue officers. It is exceedingly difficult for officers in Washington to detect collusion on the part of their subordinates in other places. These frauds have not only robbed the national treasury, but have corrupted many men of heretofore acknowledged integrity. Men of capital but without conscience have sometimes been found to be partners of those whom they have put to the front for bribery or perjury and the perils of detection. Brooks, I want you to help me break up this business."

After outlining the general situation, the commissioner became specific in his statements and informed the detective just what he expected him to accomplish. That night Brooks departed on his assignment, which was to a little town near Cincinnati, and which, for the purposes of this narrative, shall be known as Meadboro. He wore no disguise. He never did. He was in the habit of saying humorously that his actual appearance was all the disguise he ever needed.

The man who alighted from the train at Meadboro was a tall, commanding figure. He had a benevolent look which seemed to say: "I am at peace with all the world." Only two parts of his organism could be said to talk. His eyes bespoke intelligence, and his lips expressed determination. He was about 40 years of age, but his whiting hair gave him the appearance of being much older than that. Before he had been in the little village long, it was whispered about that he was a tract distributor and an agent for some charitable institution. He registered at the only hotel in the place under an assumed name. It did not take him long to get into conversation with the proprietor and so some of the loungers about the place. The talk, after exhausting itself on the weather, and horses, and politics, and church matters, finally turned on Meadboro and its inhabitants.

He learned that John Davis was probably the most important man in the locality. He combined the business of a distiller and a dairy man. He had 20 cows and a distillery, and a farm of a hundred acres. Everything seemed to be open and above board. Davis apparently worked hard, and with a son and his hired men, did not seem to have much spare time on his hands.

Brooks managed to come in contact with Davis, but there was nothing about the personality of the man that gave him any clue. Davis wore a look as though he were constantly exhausted through lack of sleep. His countenance did not give any indication of the operation of his mind. He was a man of few words. He had preferences, but no friendships. The dull horizon of his life seemed undisturbed save by occasional streaks of tact in business matters. One of the loungers in the hotel credited him with having once brought about a corner in pork on a limited scale. Another indicated that he had once mixed fine white meal with his lard. These things did not seem very important in themselves, and yet they were traits of character which made it possible to believe the charge that he had habitually withheld from taxation nearly three-fourths of his yield of whisky.

Brooks contrived to visit his farm on various occasions. He went through the dairy, examined the live stock and managed to get a peep into the distillery. He arranged his visits so that one day he went in the morning, another in the afternoon, and still another in the dusk of evening, but he was never able to find anything out of the way. From time to time whisky was sent out in casks, but it was always properly gauged and the government appeared to be receiving its tax.

Among other persons with whom the detectives became acquainted was a queer old character named Ezra Wallace. He was a Scotch Presbyterian, and was the sexton of the village church. He was an intensely religious man and hungered for discussion of theological subjects. Brooks accommodated him more than once, and it was not long before he found himself among the boarders of Ezra Wallace's humble home. The old man would have cheerfully lodged and fed him for nothing for the sake of religious controversies on which he lived, and thrived, and had his being. One night the two men needed a book to verify some disputed point. It happened to be in the church library. Brooks volunteered to go after it. The sexton handed him the key and he went to the church and obtained the book, but he conveniently forgot to return the key.

Some time after midnight he quietly hurried to the church, and using the purloined key, made his way into the edifice. It was quite dark and the place was unfamiliar, but he managed to grope along until he reached the stairway leading to the choir loft. From thence he climbed to the dingy attic at the base of the church steeple. He crawled up by easy stages until he reached the belfry. A rustling noise startled him. This was followed by another and then still another. He realized that the rats were scampering from their accustomed haunts. The fluttering of wings near the top of the structure reminded him that he had disturbed the bats. It was still quite dark, and he began to feel quite chilly, but determained to remain in the belfry until daylight.

He never realized before how slowly it is possible for minutes to pass by, but his long vigil finally came to an end. Daylight appeared and the detective brought forth a powerful telescope. With the aid of this instrument he was enabled to get a splendid view of the surrounding country. In fact, he could see everything quite clearly within a radius of a mile or more. Good housewives at work in their gardens, farmers driving their wagons to market, and men working in the fields, were all to be seen with wonderful clearness.

Presently his curiosity was satisfied and he climbed down from his lofty perch and quietly retraced his steps. He went to his boarding house and ate breakfast with a heartiness that made the cook tell him that he had the appetite of a horse. While he was at the table, Ezra Wallace came in. The sexton spoke to him very coldly. Brooks became alarmed. He did not desire the ill will of the old man, and, above all, did not wish to have his plans go astray, so he tried to conciliate him.

"Good morning, Ezra! you're looking fine this morning."

"That's the way all respectable folks should look," was the gruff rejoinder.

"Sure," responded the detective, who did not quite grasp the meaning of the sexton's remark.

The latter eyed him coldly for a moment and then said in an accusing voice:

"I may have my faults, but I've never stayed out all night in my life."

At this psychological moment the detective gave a terrific sneeze.

"If you had been in your warm bed last night," said Ezra, now making his accusation direct, "you probably wouldn't have had that cold."

"Oh, that's all right," was the cheerful reply.

"It is not all right," retorted the sexton, "and I'll thank you to give me back that key."

Brooks handed it to him with some misgivings.

"What are you going to do?" asked the detective.

"I don't know yet," was the reply. "I'll find out first whether anything's been taken out of the church. After that I'll decide what to do."

It took Brooks nearly an hour to pacify the old man, and in convincing him that although he was traveling under an assumed name, and spent the night in the steeple of the church, he was engaged in a legitimate business, and assured him that in a short time he would explain it all to his satisfaction.

The day after his night in the church steeple, Brooks was very busy. He telegraphed to Cincinnati several times, and during the afternoon and evening it was noticed that several strangers alighted from the way train that stopped at Meadboro. The detective was very stiff from his exposure, but he managed to conceal his discomfort in the thought of the important work that lay before him.

He was up at daylight the following morning. He stationed himself in the road that led from the Davis farm to the station. The two-horse team that was in the habit of hauling the milk to the train was due at six o'clock. It rumbled along just at the hour. Davis, himself, occupied a place on the seat beside the driver. The detective stood near a turn in the road. Behind him, concealed in a clump of bushes, were two able-bodied assistants. As the team reached that point Brooks stepped in front of the horses.

"Good morning, Mr. Davis—how are you feeling this morning?"

"None of your business," was the rough rejoinder. "Get out of the way and let these horses pass."

"You're not very polite this morning."

"I'm in a hurry, and I've got no time to waste on you."

"Then you'll have to take the time."

Davis' answer was characteristic of the man. He cracked his whip and started the horses. But the detective moved with amazing quickness and coolness. He pulled his pistol and pointed it at the farmer's head.

"Halt!" he cried.

At the same moment his two assistants rushed from their places of concealment.

"You see," said Brooks, pleasantly, "it's three against two. You might as well give up."

"But I don't understand," replied Davis, who did look dazed. "What's the meaning of this performance?"

"It can be explained in a few words," said the detective. "I'm a representative of the United States government, and I charge you with maintaining an illicit distrilliery."

"But I pay the government tax."

"On a small part of your product only. You've been cheating Uncle Sam for a long while."

Davis laughed dryly.

"That's easy to say, but you can't prove it."

"Yes I can."

"How?"

"Here and now. That wagon's full of whisky on which you have not paid a cent of tax."

Davis' lips curled with scorn.

"I thought you didn't know what you were talking about. We have 20 cans of milk in the wagon and it's consigned to the Harvey Milk company of Cincinnati. Isn't that true, Sam?"

The driver of the wagon, being thus appealed to, nodded a sleepy head.

"Yes, sir," he said, "that's as true as gospel."

Brooks climbed up on the hub of the front wheel and looked at the wagon.

"If you have milk here," he said, "let's see it."

"Yes," said the other detective, jocularly, "I'll take a quart."

"But it's fastened for shipping."

"Open it," said Brooks. "Open that can on the end."

The man did as he was bade, and sure enough it contained nothing but pure milk.

"Any other you'd like to see?" asked Davis triumphantly.

"Yes; open the can on the other end."

That was opened and that, like the other, yielded only Alderney milk.

"Now," said Brooks, "let me see the contents of the can in the middle."

"Oh," exclaimed Davis, "this is carrying a joke too far."

The can was opened, however, and it was found to contain high proof whisky. Every one of the other 17 cans were filled with distilled spirits. Davis was arrested, tried and convicted, and the far-reaching conspiracy of defrauding the government defeated. Brooks was highly complimented by Commissioner Rollins, and shortly afterwards was assigned to Philadelphia, where he won new laurels in ferreting out and convicting those who were cheating Uncle Sam of his legal dues.

ANXIETY WAS FOR THE KEG

Overcharge a Small Matter, but Customer Did Hate to See Good Material Hurt.

Every nail-keg in the store had its occupant, the checker-board was working overtime, and mittens and mufflers were stuffed in bulky pockets, as their owners drew closer round the big, rusty stove.

The door opened noisily, letting in a blast of the storm raging outside, and in its wake followed Rufe Blevins, a giant wood-chopper, whose good nature and ready wit made him a welcome addition to the store circle.

The loafers moved a little closer together to make room for Rufe on a soap-box, but he marched past the friendly circle, plumped an empty molasses-keg down on the counter, and drew a stained bill from his pocket, which he held out to the proprietor of the store.

An expectant grin went round the circle, for Storekeeper Jones had the reputation of never wronging himself by overweighing or undercharging. The merchant adjusted his glasses and looked expectantly from the bill to the wood-chopper.

"Notice you charged me for five gallons o' molasses last time I had this four-gallon keg filled," drawled Rufe. "I don't mind payin' for the extra gallon, Mr. Jones, but I do kinder hate to have a good keg strained to pieces."—Youth's Companion.

A man is seldom arrested for striking an attitude.

AS HE UNDERSTOOD THEM

Apprentice Carried Out Orders of His Employer, but the Result Was Sad.

"Now, William," the old farmer said to his new apprentice, "I want thee to mind what I do say to thee, to be sharp and attentive and to delay not in carrying out my instructions."

"Ay, ay, zur," replied William.

"First, now, I want thee to take out the old white mare and have her shod."

"Ay, ay, zur," said William, and departed.

He returned two hours later and the old farmer questioned him.

"Thee hast not been quick, lad," he said, reprovingly, "but if thee hast done thy work as I ordered thee thou shalt be forgiven. Didst thee have the mare shod, as I telled thee?"

"Ay, ay, zur!" replied William, beaming. "Didst thou not hear the gun? I shot her myself and I've just buried her."—London Answers.

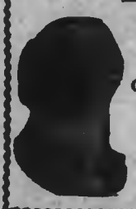
PEOPLE'S PULPIT.



Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

ALL-SEEING EYE OF ALMIGHTY GOD

A Much-Needed Lesson in an Unorthodox Setting—But What Is Orthodoxy?

Brooklyn, N.Y., July 30.—Notwithstanding the summer season Brooklyn Tabernacle was crowded to-day. Pastor Russell took for his text the words of the Prophet David, "Whither shall I flee from Thy presence? If I ascend up into the heaven, Thou art there; if I make my bed in hell, behold, Thou art there" (Psalm cxxxix, 7, 8). He said:

We are living in a day when money, pleasure and pain seem to be the assets of the masses. The Evolution theory and the Higher Criticism of the Bible have fostered unbelief to such an extent that everything intangible is doubted. Beginning with the college professor and the majority of the educated ministers this skepticism has embraced the wealthy, who are satiated with the blessings of prosperity. To these heaven and heavenly things seem vagaries as compared with present enjoyments and hopes. Not for a long time have these believed in and feared eternal torment. And their present attitude is one of doubt respecting everything connected with the Bible. They well know that outside the Bible there is nothing but guess work, and they prefer their own guesses to those of other people. Very many of them speak candidly and tell that they are agnostics, that they are uncertain and would like to be informed respecting the future.

A very similar condition growingly prevails amongst the poorer classes and the uneducated, who say, We believed the scholars when they told us the Bible was inspired. Why should we not believe them now when they declare that it is a fraud? As the wealthy doubt that God will specially favor them, so the poor doubt whether God will specially disfavor them. Both classes are reaching the conclusion that fortune or disaster rests, not with the Lord, but with themselves.

The effect of all this loss of faith in an Almighty God is seen on every hand and is felt by many. One of the consequences is that the religious element of man's nature is becoming numb and the masses, rich and poor, are seeking a substitute in pleasure; as the Apostle's words foretold, they are "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." Additionally, many of the wealthy carry on a kind of brigandage along commercial lines. Desirous of imitating them, but unable so to do, others are filling the world with violence to an extent that is alarming to everybody. Were it not for our elaborate and costly police protection life and property would be far less secure in civilised lands than amongst the heathen. With all the protection afforded by telephone, telegraph, police, etc., etc., our rulers and officials tell us that they are often bewildered in their attempts to preserve law and order.

Many learned men believe that there is no other God than Nature; and many of the unlearned are following their lead. They reason that Nature served them as both father and mother, that Nature is pitiless, unsympathetic, cruel. Indeed, this is one of their special arguments against a personal God, for they say that such a God would not permit the sufferings we witness on every hand and the still more terrible sufferings which the creeds of Christendom have taught them are in store for all except the saintly few.

It is time that we return to the Bible proposition and see the truth of the statement, "The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God." Surely there is something wrong with the brain which, after noting the wonders of nature, seen in the surrounding worlds and systems and attested in all matters earthly, sees not an intelligent Creator! The wonderful adaptability of our own bodies tells of a wise Creator.

If we compare the human eye, adapted to its purposes and conditions, with the eye of a fish, adapted to its different conditions, and with the eye of a beetle, adapted to still different conditions, we see the most indubitable proofs of profoundest wisdom and superhuman skill. When we think of man's wonderful powers and of his great achievements in the world and then consider his inability to make a single living thing, from a microbe to an elephant, from a tiny seed to a tree, surely we should concede that the One who ordered nature in the production of these wonderful variations, and created man himself, must be an Almighty, intelligent God. Surely "Day unto day uttereth speech and night unto night showeth knowledge" along these lines, to those who have the eyes of understanding to see. It is time that these great truths were being emphasised and that the boastful gentlemen who ignore them should have their true measure taken, regardless of how many title- may follow their names. The moderately educated as well as the illiterate need such a testimony to come from every pulpit. And if it does not soon come our civilization will be wrecked.

"Thou, God, seest me"; "The eye of the Lord is in every place." These Scriptures give us the proper conception of the Almighty. As with the telescope; the microscope, the telephone, etc., man can enlarge his range of vision and hearing, so by powers still more wonderful the Almighty is cognizant of all the affairs of the Universe. We grant that our feeble minds are unable to comprehend so great, so universal an Intelligence.

We cannot know in what manner the angels, the spirit servants of God are, as His eyes, in every place to take cognizance of our affairs. We cannot know in what manner the electric or lightning flash serves as a Divine messenger. But we can believe that a Soul so infinitely high above us possesses powers of information as far beyond our comprehension as the telephone and wireless telegraphy and electric light were beyond the comprehension which our forefathers had of these things in their day. It is easier to believe that so great a Being as the One who formed man should have all wisdom and all power than to believe Him deficient of these. The Scriptural argument is a good one: "He that formed the eye, shall He not see? He that formed the ear, shall He not hear?"

The creeds handed down to us from the dark past declare that God is everywhere present — omnipresent. This is as unthinkable as it is foolish and unscriptural. Taking advantage of this error of "orthodoxy," the Adversary has turned many away from a belief in a personal God. He who is everywhere is nowhere. The result is the absurd view which has taken hold on some otherwise intelligent people, to the effect that good and God are synonomous. Hence a log of wood that is good for something, that can be made into something useful, is said to have good in it, and, hence, to have God in it—ditto, a piece of iron, a bed, a chair, a table. The folly grows into saying that God is everywhere and is in everything. Thus faith in a "god of nature and happen-so" takes the place of faith in the God of the Bible, whose residence is in heaven, but whose intelligence and power extend throughout the Universe, in thousands of ways of which we are only learning—through electricity, radio activity, etc., besides angelic messengers that can come and go like the wind.

Our text, misunderstood, is supposed to teach Divine omnipresence, whereas it really teaches Divine omniscience and Almighty power. The Lord's presence, as represented in His intelligence and power, are everywhere. Nowhere could we go to be beyond His reach and beyond His knowledge. Were this thought thoroughly impressed upon every human mind, what a vast difference it would make in human conduct from that now seen—in Wall Street, in banks, in palaces, in hovels, in saloons, in gambling houses—everywhere. It is the great lesson needed by the whole world. Everyone who believes this should join with nature in attesting Divine Wisdom, Power, Justice and Love.

But really the undermining of faith in the God of the Bible has been accomplished largely by the misrepresentation of the Bible's teaching. Our text, for instance, is supposed to teach that God is in heaven with the saintly, rejoicing with them and enjoying their pleasure and that He also is in hell with the unsaintly, looking upon their sufferings and tortures and planning with devils for their everlasting continuance. Thinking minds are rejecting such nonsense, but, alas, they are rejecting the Bible, too, hence have no foundation for a better, truer faith.

Every educated minister knows that I tell the Truth to the common people when I say that the word hell in our text has not the slightest reference to a place of torture, or even of consciousness. Indeed this is true of every occurrence of the word hell, from Genesis to Malachi. In every instance the translation is from the same Hebrew word, sheol, which signifies the grave, the tomb, and is thus most frequently translated.

I urge upon all ministers of education to join with me in explaining to the public the true meaning of the Hebrew word sheol and the Greek word hades. Whatever may have been their thought of expediency in the past they should see that the mistaken views of the meaning of these words are undermining the faith of Christendom.

The Psalmist really said, "If I ascend up into the sky, Thou art there; if I make my bed in sheol (the grave), behold, Thou art there . . . In the uttermost parts of the sea, even there shall Thy hand lead me and Thy right hand shall hold me." The thought is that the Divine Power is everywhere, that whether we live or die, nothing can separate us from God's Wisdom and Power and from the ultimate accomplishment of our rescue from the power of the grave, which God has purposed and has promised shall be done through the great Messiah. For His Kingdom we wait and pray.

The word orthodox signifies "correct in doctrine." I am ready to admit that my presentation is not the ordinary one—but I claim that it is correct, that it is the true doctrine of the Word of God. If so it is orthodox, in the highest sense of that term, and everything to the contrary, being opposed to the standards of God's Word, must be unorthodox. Everything depends upon our standard. I stand for the Bible, its teaching, its doctrines, and therefore am orthodox. On the contrary, Higher Critics and Evolutionists and those who hold the creeds of the "Dark Ages," contradictory to the Bible, are proportionately unorthodox—heretical.

What Christendom needs to-day is a return to the Bible, an investigation of its teachings and, correspondingly a rejection of all human creeds, which are admittedly more or less obscure. Let us "stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free." Let us accept the Bible as the only standard. Let us study it and understand it to the extent of our ability. Let us rejoice in every degree of harmony we all attain in the correct understanding of it. Let us fellowship as Christians all who acknowledge its Divine authenticity and who, in harmony with its presentation, are trusting in Jesus as their Redeemer, and who, in acceptance of His invitation, have consecrated self to be His footstep followers.

These are the real Christians, with whatever sect or party they may have become identified, through the supposition that they were doing the will of God. These alone are the saints; these alone are running in the race course; these alone have the opportunity of making their "calling and election sure." The masses known as Christendom are unchristian in every sense of the word. They are civilized heathen, in the sense that they do not recognise any more than do the heathen, a personal God of glorious character, perfect in His Wisdom, Justice, Love and Power. They realize not His All-seeing Eye. And their general lives show their lack of this knowledge and this faith.

More than this (shall we say it?) the majority of professed church members, so far as we can understand their sentiments as privately expressed and publicly declared by the ministers of their choice, are no more Christians than are the Jews. They neither believe the Bible to be the Divine Revelation nor do they accept the Lord Jesus Christ as the world's Redeemer from sin and death. Of course, therefore, they do not profess to consecrate their lives to sacrificially follow One in whose redemptive work they do not believe.

Comparatively few of the hundreds of thousands of those who have named the name of Christ, and who have come under various denominational yokes, have any knowledge of the Mystery of the Cross of Christ, the Mystery of the Gospel. "The Mystery which hath been hid from ages and generations, but now is made manifest to his saints" (Colossians i, 26).

Alas, the majority seem content to have merely a "name to live" and wish merely to be called Christians and to wear a jeweled cross. It is but the few of those who have tasted that the Lord is gracious and have felt an earnest desire to know and to do the Father's will at the cost of self-sacrifice. With the majority the intimation that a certain course in life is the "narrow way," the way of the Cross, is sufficient to turn them in an opposite direction; for, while they would like to share the heavenly glories and honors of the Lord, they are unwilling to be sharers in His ignominy, sufferings and death.

These, without relinquishing their desire for righteousness, are disinclined to go to such lengths as the Master and the Apostles taught and exemplified. Hence, they are not interested in the "deep things" of God's Word, but merely in the more superficial. In the language of the Scriptures, they are willing to say, "We will eat our own bread, and wear our own apparel; only let us be called by thy name, to take away our reproach" (Isaiah iv, 1).

The fault lies largely with many of the clergy, who are not leading the people to "the faith once delivered to the saints," but away from it.

The Scriptures most distinctly teach that we are under the reign of the "Prince of this world," Satan, and that our Lord at His Second Coming in power and great glory will bind or restrain this strong one and overthrow his empire, which is not of Divine authorization, but built upon human weaknesses, ignorance and superstition. We are distinctly told that Satan shall be bound for that thousand years (the Millennium) that he may deceive the people no more until the thousand years shall be finished."

Surely, then, the Lord has used the great Adversary to assist in the accomplishing of the Divine purposes. Satan may have supposed that he was frustrating God's plans, but just as surely he was mistaken. The Divine Word is sure which declares, "My Word that goeth forth out of My mouth shall not return unto Me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in that whereunto I sent it."

It is time that all who really believe in the Bible, who really believe that Jesus left the glory of the Father and humbled Himself even unto death, thus providing the redemptive price for the Church and for the world, should proclaim these facts clearly, positively. They should also declare, as do the Scriptures, the Second Coming of the Redeemer and the establishment of His Kingdom in Divine power and majesty, for the putting down of sin and the lifting up of mankind to glorious privileges of restitution, with a just penalty against every form of sin, and the Second Death as the penalty for wilful, persistent disobedience.

Prince Secondary.

Sir Arthur Bigge, secretary to the King, tells an entertaining story of how one of the body servants of King George was once trying to explain to him some incident that had taken place.

"Me and the Prince——" he began, when Sir Arthur pulled him up.

"You should say 'the Prince and I,'" he observed. The man looked at him for a moment and then said:

"I beg pardon, sir, but I did not know you were there at all. However, you and me and the Prince."

Sir Arthur was compelled to laugh at this, and, after another attempt to explain to the man how the story should be told, was content to let him tell it in his own fashion.

Her Chance and She Took It.

Wedmore—I made the mistake of my life last night. I told my wife I didn't like her new gown.

Singleton—And she flared up, eh?

Wedmore—Oh, no; it wasn't that. But now she wants the money for another.

"Now, Willie, I am going to buy you a pair of pants, and you may pick them out in the show window."

"Yes'm. I want that pair marked 'These can't be beat.'"—Buffalo News.

My Mary has a lightsome step,
And I'd tread lightly, too,
If I had forced a vise four feet
Into a size three shoe.

POKER GAME SEIZED.

Police In Woodstock Drop In on a Quiet Hand of "Draw."

Woodstock, Aug. 1.—Chief of Police Killing, accompanied by Constable Robertson of the city police force, paid an early morning visit to a Dundas street room about 1.30 yesterday morning and disturbed a quiet game of poker that had been started on Saturday evening, and which had extended into the Sabbath. As a result the names of fourteen men who were in the room at the time, and some of whom are prominent business men of the city were taken, and they in all probability will be asked to appear before the magistrate at an early date.

The raid by the police was entirely unexpected, and resulted in considerable consternation to the members of the party. The police are not talking for publication for some reason or other, but it is understood that quite a little layout was confiscated, including some of the tell-tale chips. The loose change on the table was gathered in by the players.

The raid was carefully planned by Chief Killing, who had received a tip that there was a joint in operation and the officers effected their entrance to the room by creeping up the back stairs in their stocking feet.

REBELS AT CAPITAL.

Haitian Insurgents Are Close on the President.

Port-au-Prince, Haiti, Aug. 1.—Some excitement was caused here yesterday by an unfounded report of the embarkation of President Simon, who on the contrary has decided to resist the revolutionists to the last. The Government has organized a defence of the capital. The public continues alarmed, and awaits with impatience the announced coming of ships of war representing the different nations.

Gabriel Sylvain, a cousin of the Minister of the Interior, was yesterday made prefect of police in succession to Ferdinand, who after being accused of conspiring in the interests of Gen. Firmin, one of the revolutionary leaders, sought refuge in the French legation to avoid arrest. During the night several persons attempted incendiarism, but were surprised and fired upon by a military patrol, under command of Minister Sylvain.

The "17 Decembre" arrived here yesterday. The position of the revolutionists remains unchanged, their forces being held chiefly to the north of the city. Sunday the President appeared in the streets for the purpose of calming and re-assuring the populace.

Husband and Child Missing.

Montreal, Aug. 1.—Her husband gone and her 2 1-2-year-old son also vanished, Mrs. Charles O'Neill of 311 Cadieux street, is crushed under a double load of sorrow.

A week ago Charles O'Neill, vendor of small wares, was lost to sight. On Saturday afternoon the little son begged a penny to buy ice cream. He toddled off to make the purchase and has not been seen since.

Two or three days after her husband had failed to return, Mrs. O'Neill received word from Kingston that her husband was being detained in that city.

She communicated with the municipal authorities, but her letter could hardly have left the city when she received another from Toronto, stating that her wandering husband was there, also under detention.

Since then the distracted woman has had no word which might give her a clue as to the whereabouts of her husband, whom she hopes will return to help her seek her baby.

Duties Removed From Coal.

Ottawa, Aug. 1.—With a view to relieving the situation as it has developed in the Canadian west in consequence of the prolonged cessation of operations at the coal mines in southern British Columbia and Alberta, an order-in-council was passed by the Government yesterday, providing that on and after Aug. 7 next, duties should be removed on all coal imported into Canada at the ports on the southern frontier west of Sault Ste. Marie, for consumption in British Columbia (east of the 122nd meridian of longitude), and in the Provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

Sticks to His Post.

London, Aug. 1.—Although he had engaged passage to New York for himself and wife on board the steamer Lusitania, which sailed last Saturday, the Earl of Cranard was compelled to stay here. The countess sailed alone. The Earl was compelled to forego the trip in order that he may be present to help pass the veto bill through the House of Lords. The fact that he holds a political appointment as master-of-the-horse in the King's household obligates him to the Government.

No Definite Date.

Ottawa, Aug. 1. In reference to the statement that the Duke of Connaught will arrive at Quebec, Oct. 13, it was learned from Major Trotter, A.D.C., that no official notice has yet been received. Major Trotter stated, however, that he had heard of the report to the effect that the duke was to sail on Oct. 6, but that no preparations would be entered upon until official notification is received.

Bottomley Loses Appeal.

London, Aug. 1.—Horatio W. Bottomley, the editor, financier, newspaper owner and member of Parliament, yesterday lost his appeal in the Appeal Court from the decision of June 30, by which he was ordered to pay $250,000 to Mrs. Eleanor Curtis, wife of a London barrister. Mrs. Curtis charged Bottomley with getting money from her father by misrepresentation.

"Wire Pool" Fines.

New York, Aug. 1.—William P. Palmer and ten others indicted for connection with the wire pools, filed pleas of "nolo contendere" yesterday. Palmer had seven indictments against him and was fined $1,000. The rest, with one indictment, were fined $1,000 each.

BADLY DECOMPOSED BODY OF UNKNOWN MAN WAS FOUND IN AN OLD BARN NEAR FRASERVILLE LAST NIGHT---A MYSTERY

The Above Was Startling Discovery of Some Farmers Last Evening About 5:30--Body Was Decomposed Beyond Recognition and Had Been There for Some Time---No Person Missing but a Tramp Was Seen in the Vicinity.

All the startling details of probably a horrible tragedy have not yet come to light, but a most gruesome find was the experience of a farmer named Martin Henry last evening on Mr. J. Madill's farm near Fraserville. Mr. Henry was just going to put the horses which he had been working, into an old barn, while he was having supper, and to his dismay, found the badly decomposed and decayed body of a man lying in a manger. The body had apparently been there for some time, as the flesh had so decayed that the body was not recognizable. The barn is an old log structure situated about a mile and a half north of Fraserville, and about 100 yards from the road. It had not been used all summer, and as the men had been working at the grain near the barn all day, they decided to tie the horses in there while they sat down for luncheon, and in this manner found the unknown man. The body was found about 5.30 last night, and as the Coroner, Dr. Greer, was at Fraserville conducting the Harrison inquest, he empanneled the following jury for this inquest: Joseph Madill foreman, Geo. Bidgood, Albert Reynolds, John Armstrong, Sidney Armstrong, Stanley Armstrong, Stewart Hogg, Nelson Sage, Geo. Moncrief, John Boyd, Wm. Laug and Robt. Lockie.

The jury was empanneled about 11.30 last night and proceeded to the barn and viewed the remains. No person has been reported missing in that neighbourhood, but an old man named John Carroll was last seen in that neighbourhood about six weeks ago, and in conversation with a man of that neighbourhood stated that his money was all gone and he was in very hard circumstances, and it is thought that the remains may prove to be those of Carroll, though at the time of going to press no information had been to hand.

INQUEST RESUMED

Inquest into Death of Mrs. Thos. Harrison Resumed Last Night and Important Evidence Taken

ADJOURNED AGAIN

The adjourned inquest into the death of Mrs. Thos. Harrison, whose sudden death occurred at Fraserville a week ago, was resumed last night in the Orange Hall at that place, and on account of the Provincial Analyst not having his report of the stomach yet ready, another adjournment had to be made. The inquest will be resumed at the town hall two weeks from last night at 8 o'clock.

Although no conclusion could be arrived at last night, on account of the wanting information from the Analyst, a great amount of valuable information was imparted. All the witnesses in the case were examined, and their respective remarks are, in part, the following:

Trouble With Bank.

Thos. P. Doig, an accountant in the Bank of Toronto, here, was the first witness called. With regard to the financial embarrassment the late Mrs. Harrison was in, he outlined her connection with the said bank. He stated that on the 27th of July, he and the Deputy Sheriff served a writ of summons on Mrs. Harrison. She told the men a story which was afterwards proved by them to be false. She made a statement to the effect that her husband was in Seaforth, with blood poisoning.

It appears that previous to this, she had been served several times with notices to the effect that her note in the Bank was due, and several times she had promised payment, but failed to keep her promise. She also told them a story of her husband being left a large sum of money by a deceased relative, since he had taken sick, and she told them that she was waiting for a telegram telling her where the money was. The amount of the supposed fortune was in the neighbourhood of $7,000. Upon the same afternoon that she had told the men about the fortune, and the sickness of her husband, etc., she also told them that she had sold Mr. Tinney at Cavanville, a number of cattle, for which she was expecting to realize a large sum. Doubting the truth of her statement, the men drove to Cavanville, where they were informed by Mr. Tinney that he had bought no cattle off her at all, but that some time previous he had purchased a horse from Mr. Harrison. The two men then drove back to Harrison's, and informed Mrs. Harrison that they had found her statement to be false, and that they had found out that her husband was working back in the fields at the present time. They further told her that they could arrest her husband for signing a false statement in September. The amount of the Bank's judgment against Mrs. Harrison was less than $1,000.00. Mr. Doig stated that they drove away at that, without waiting to see what effect their remarks would make on Mrs. Harrison. This was the night previous to her death, and the following day Mr. Hall came out with the papers for Mr. Harrison, and found Mrs. Harrison had died some few hours previous.

Mr. G. N. Gordon Examined.

Mr. G. N. Gordon was next called. He said that he had done some work for Mrs. Harrison, but Hall, Medd & Davidson had done the most of it. He also stated that she had been mixed up in a slander action against Mr. Joseph Madill, of Fraserville, and the pleadings had been closed, and the case practically settled. Mr. Gordon stated that the case caused her some worry, at one time, but the last six months or so, it did not appear to give her any particular concern. Mr. Gordon further stated that some time ago he had endorsed a note for her, for $600.00, only $200.00 of which had been paid. This amount she got from the Bank of Nova Scotia. Mr. Gordon remarked that he had seen the deceased the previous Saturday, and she was in high spirits, apparently, and did not seem to have a bit of worry. As far as he was concerned Mr. Gordon said that she did all the business, and her husband did not do much. He further stated that while the slander case was going on, there was a little friction between husband and wife, but as far as he could judge, the trouble had passed over.

Mr. Harrison's Story.

Mr. Thos. Harrison, husband of the deceased, told of how Mrs. Harrison became agitated over the threat of arrest that Mr. Little and Mr. Doig had made, and wanted him to go to Peterborough right away that night, and they had the horses hitched, and then decided not to go until morning. Mr. Harrison also stated that Mrs. Harrison told him to go to bed, that she could not, for it was no use; she said she would not sleep any way. He said that they did not go to bed, and spent the

8 PATIENTS IN HAMILTON ASYLUM LOSE THEIR LIVES IN TERRIBLE FIRE AN EARLY MORNING GATASTROPHE

Five Charred Corpses Found This Morning in a Small Room ---Three Hundred of Panic-Stricken Patients Were Huddled Together---Paralyzed With Fright.

SOME DASHED INTO FLAMES AFTER BEING RESCUED

Special to The Examiner:

Place—Hamilton Asylum.
Time—About 1.30 this morning.
Official list of dead:
Chas. Hylliars of Dunnville.
Alfred Nay, St. Catharines.
John Heffernan, of Arthur.
Thos. Evans, Elora.
Edward Sedke, Welland.
John F. Holdaway, Lifdenwood.
George Westorey, Hockley.
Albert Bowler, Dundalk.

Above is an official list of the names of those who were burned to death in a fire, which broke out about 1.30 this morning on the top floor of the main building of the Hamilton Asylum for the Insane, some of whom may be fatally burned, and three hundred patients went into hysterics before the flames were controlled. The fire started in the store-room, near the hall on the top floor, and spread rapidly. Night Watchman Fred Bassett discovered it, and turned in an alarm for the asylum fire department. A hurried call was sent in and the city brigade followed. Charles Piper, an attendant, fought the fire over the transom door of the store room till he was driven back and carried out unconscious. He claimed that if another extinguisher had been available he could have put the fire out. The Asylum Fire Department was powerless and when the city firemen arrived the top of the building was in flames.

Hundreds of people from the city witnessed heroic deeds and miraculous escapes. The city firemen caught half of the patients in the life nets as they dropped or were thrown from top floors. Some of the patients clung to eaves and cried piteously for aid. Tommy Fizgerald, tiller man for the Auto Fire truck, dashed through the fire and smoke time and again, and saved at least six persons, nearly losing his own life in attempting to save one patient, who resisted and perished. Policeman Campaign and Fireman Wheaton also had narrow escapes. A large section of the floor collapsed in an hour's time, and the firemen and police made frantic attempts to save the patients on the top floor. At 4 o'clock this morning five charred corpses were found in a small room of this flat. Attendants had great difficulty in driving the top storey patients to safety; three hundred were quartered there and all were panic stricken. Some of the patients rushed back into the fire after being taken to safe corridors.

Dan Parker, a coloured patient, on the fourth floor, slept through it all and when found by the police, asked "What's the matter?" Provincial Inspector Rogers and staff are here to investigate.

Despite Inspector Rogers' statement, there is some talk of the inmates having secured matches and started the fire. This will be investigated at the inquest, which Coroner McNichol opened this afternoon.

Later.—Inspector Rogers said this afternoon that defective wiring had caused the fire and that the loss would be fifteen thousand dollars.

NOT MUCH DAMAGED

The Cruiser Niobe is Not Much Damaged—Is Now at Clarke's Harbour

COURT AT HALIFAX

(The Globe.)

HALIFAX, JULY 31.—A despatch from the cruiser Niobe this morning to the naval yard authorities says all is well and the cruiser only slightly damaged.

The cruiser changed her place of anchorage to-day from Shag Harbour to Clarke's Harbour. She was accompanied by the Government steamers Lady Laurier and Stanley, and will not move till orders are received from Admiral Kingsmill, after the fog has cleared and steaming can be improved. Admiral Kingsmill and his Chief of Staff, Commander Roper, arrived to-night from Ottawa, and immediately went into consultation with the heads of the marine and naval departments at Halifax.

OTTAWA, JULY 31.—A Court of Inquiry, which is in the nature of a private departmental investigation, will be held by the Canadian Navy Department into the grounding of the Niobe. It will take place probably in Halifax and will be conducted by Commander Martin of Halifax, Commander Roper of Headquarters, and Lieut. Nixon of the Naval College. So far as the department knew to-day, the damage to the Niobe is not great.

ENTRANCE INTO FACULTIES OF EDUCATION

Best Record and Highest Percentage of Students From This City in 20 Years—Nearly All Were Successful.

REMARKS

The results of the Faculty Entrance examinations are announced to-day, and a most gratifying feature of the announcement is the fact that the local High school students have made a record hitherto unparalleled in the history of the Peterborough Collegiate Institute. In the Faculty Entrance, Part I, six of the seven pupils were successful. The names, in alphabetical order are as follows:

Mabel Brown, Emma Corkery, Russell Kirn, Elizabeth McNamara, Frances McNamara, Gladys Moore.

Seven candidates wrote on Part II and all were successful, as follows:

Frank Austin, Dorothy Fessenden, Grant Mowat, May Nesbitt, Leonora Park, Elisabeth Read, Clara Young.

The name of James Ayres, who wrote on both parts, does not appear, as he wrote on the Honour Scholarship examinations, the results of which are not yet announced. Principal Kenner and his staff are to be warmly congratulated on the splendid showing made by the students, as it reflects most favourably on the conscientious and scholarly instruction rendered by himself and his colleagues.

A record of 86 per cent successful in Part I and 100 per cent. in Part II is something that calls for congratulation.

G. T. STRIKE DIFFICULTIES SETTLED

OTTAWA, JULY 31.—It is understood that as a result of a recent conference between President Hayes of the Grand Trunk Railway, Messrs. Berry and Murdock, representing the trainmen's and conductors' organizations, and the Ministers of Labour and Railways, all the difficulties resulting from the Grand Trunk strike and the reinstatement of the striking men have been satisfactorily adjusted.

An announcement is expected in a few days. The Opposition have been counting on making considerable capital out of dissatisfaction among the men as to the settlement of the strike and the Government's responsibility therefor. This final successful effort of the Government to secure justice for the men will now rob the Opposition critics of the campaign capital they hoped to make.—Globe.

GREAT PREPARATIONS MADE FOR THE AVIATION MEET

E. Doherty, the daring young Buffalo aviator, who was formerly well known in Toronto, being a graduate of the School of Practical Science, and was commonly known as "Gink" arrived in Toronto this morning. He will fly at the Donlands meet, which opens Thursday evening.

Mr. Chas. F. Willard's new passenger machine also arrived from New York.

Mr. J. W. Ward, with his fast machine, will arrive Tuesday morning. Mr. McCurdy, speaking of Mr. Ward, stated that perhaps he was the most daring aviator in America. His special ty is altitude flying, and it is expected that the Canadian record will be smashed at Donlands this week.

F. A. Wildman, of New York, arrives with a special machine Wednesday evening.

Great preparations are being made at Donlands for the opening Thursday evening. The C.P.R. are arranging ample accommodation of two trains which leave the Union Station and North Toronto at 6.10 p.m. It is only about twenty minutes ride to the park and the train stops at a spot immediately adjoining the grand stand, as the railroad track runs through the Donlands farm. Motorists will go out by the Don Mills road, a distance of five miles from corner Gerrard and Broadview. Road is in good condition.

BURNED TO DEATH

DETROIT, AUGUST 1st. — Mrs Gusty Mumford, 60 years old, 63 Howard street, was burned to death in a fire that destroyed the building in which she roomed last evening. While the house was enveloped in flames, she was seen by people on the street to stagger toward the door opening from her room to the stairway which led to safety.

As she threw open the door a rush of flames met her. Then the smoke and flames became so thick that she could no longer be seen from the street, but her agonized screams could be heard above the roar of the fire.

After the flames had been beaten down and the pall of smoke had lifted, a policeman, watching the house, saw something in the northwest window on the second storey. As the smoke cleared further, the head of a woman, the flesh burned black, was seen resting on the window sill. One arm, burned to the bones, with shreds of flesh hanging loosely from it, was thrown over the sill. Women looked and sobbed. Men turned their heads away. The firemen, standing on the still smouldering roof, heard the shouts of Chief Broderick: "For God's sake, hurry. There may be some one still alive in the building."

But no more were found. Mrs. Mumford had been the only victim of the flames. Just a second more, and she would have had time to raise the window and jump. But the second was denied her.

The fire started, according to the firemen, in the kitchen of Mrs. Jennie Osborne, who ran a grocery store there, living in the rear rooms. She made her escape. She estimates her loss at about $1500, covered by insurance.

It is thought that Mrs. Mumford was taking her accustomed afternoon nap when the fire started. It spread with bewildering rapidity, embracing the entire house in a few minutes. Probably it was the crackling of the flames that awakened her, but too late.

His Face Cut By A Bear

CHATHAM, N.B., JULY 21.—Fred M. Tweedie, son of Lieut.-Governor Tweedie, had quite an adventure with a bear as he was returning from his summer cottage at Burnt Church, this morning. With him was James Shields, bridge inspector, and when Grand Downs was reached a bear jumped from the woods about twenty feet ahead of the car. At this spot is a good stretch of road and the car was running at its limit.

Mr. Tweedie had little time to make up his mind what to do, but managed to steer his machine aside sufficiently to miss the bear, which stood on its hind feet with forepaws outstretched. As the car passed the bear the animal let out a vicious swipe with its paw, which just caught the side of Mr. Shield's face with one claw, missing the eye, but making a nasty wound which bled freely. The bear stood over six feet high, but was in poor condition.—Globe.

Betting Is Five To One That Laurier Will Win

Money Offered at Ottawa, With No Takers---Wagering That the Liberal Majority Will Be Sixty at Least

OTTAWA, JULY 31.—The sporting blood of many members has been raised by the near approach of the elections, and a substantial sum of money has been put up on the result among the men who are the most concerned in that result.

The night before the House dissolved a bet of $100 was made in one of the galleries during the progress of business between one of the Quebec members and a Montreal business man. The peculiar part of it was that they were both willing to risk money that the Liberals would be returned to power. So confident was the member for Quebec that he bet the hundred that Sir. Wilfrid would come back with a majority of sixty. The Montrealer was willing to let on an unimpaired majority, but balked on the larger figure and took it up. A member of the Cabinet was selected to hold the money.

Five to one without any takers was offered yesterday on the return of the Government, the man who made the offer stating that he had $5000 which he was willing to hazard, though not all at that odds. He offered even money that Mr. Borden would be defeated in Halifax, and two to one that the Conservatives would not gain two seats in the Province of Quebec. He got some money up on this.

Most of the members have already left, and the remaining ones are getting out tonight. The sudden dissolution left them all stranded over Sunday, and there was the greatest impatience to get away and spend every possible hour of the few that there are in hard work among the voters.—Toronto Star.

Peterborough To The Fore In Providing Aid For Fire Sufferers

A Letter of Gratitude From a Cobalt Lady---Timely Aid Brought Comfort and Relief to Many Destitute and Suffering Persons.

The Examiner, Peterborough, Ont.

Dear Sir—I desire to convey to you the deep gratitude of our people for the generous assistance so promptly extended to them by your citizens. Your timely aid brought comfort and relief to many destitute and suffering persons. I desire to extend to you and your good citizens our best wishes. And trust that you may never pass through such an ordea as we have experienced."

If I had the addresses of all the donors, I would thank them all by a personal letter, but this is the only way I can do so, as you say in your paper, when asking for the assistance for the fire sufferers that Peterborough is not accustomed to fall behind in such movements. I am pleased to tell you that so far they are away ahead of all the other towns and cities, and I hope and pray that God will bless and prosper them, for they have made many a home happy Again thanking you, I remain,

Yours sincerely,
Elizabeth White.

BODY FOUND IN BARN IDENTIFIED

Body Was That of John Carroll and it is Thought He Took Weak Spell

WAS 75 YEARS OLD

An official report this afternoon from Springville, is to the effect that the body found was that of John Carroll, an old man aged 75 years. For some time past he had been wandering about the country, and told a resident of Springville about six weeks ago, when he was last seen, that his money had run out, and he was in hard circumstances. Constable Archie Moore is in charge of the remains at present. An inquest will be held at the town hall next Wednesday night at 8 o'clock. It is thought, however, that he took a weak spell and fell into the manger, where he expired from weakness and his advanced age.

PETERBORO' PEOPLE SIGNALLY HONOURED

Mr. Reginald Turner who has been spending the last six weeks in England, has informed his father by letter that he and Mrs. Turner have been invited to a dinner and entertainment given by Lord Strathcona, in honour of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught. Several other distinguished Canadians have been similarly honoured, and it is expected that the affair, while ostensibly a social function will also prove of considerable political value to the coming Lieutenant-Governor, whose knowledge of Canadians and their ways, while extensive, will be enlarged as a result of his meeting with our representatives now in London.

MID-OCEAN CONTRIBUTION TO CHILDREN'S AID FUNDS

Mr. Peter Campbell, who returned yesterday from a Coronation visit to the old country, requests the Examiner to acknowledge the receipt of a $5 contribution to the funds of the Children's Aid Society, of which he is treasurer, received in mid-ocean. During the homeward voyage Mr. Campbell, in the course of conversation with a fellow passenger, Mr. J. Grove Porter, of Newark, N.J., U.S.A., explained the objects and workings of our Children's Aid Society, which is financed by voluntary contributions. Mr. Porter was so deeply interested that he gave Mr. Campbell $5, to be applied to the funds of the society in promotion of its work.

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unparalleled."

TUESDAY, AUGUST 1, 1911

A GOOD TEST.

Hon. Clifford Sifton declares that he will not be a candidate in Brandon, which he has represented, and ceased to represent when he took ground against reciprocity; but he says he will help M. Borden fight reciprocity. If Mr. Sifton wants to really test public opinion upon reciprocity he might offer himself as a candidate in Brandon, which he has represented since 1896, when he was elected by acclamation in a bye-election, by 600 majority in 1900; by 821 in 1904, and by 69 in 1908. Brandon would make short work of Mr. Sifton's anti-reciprocity heresy.

MONEY TALKS.

Willingness to risk money is one of the best tests of sincerity of conviction. Betting on an event will not influence its issue, but it shows confidence. Judged by this standard the Liberals enter the contest full of courage and hope; and judged by the same standard the Conservatives enter the contest beaten in the beginning. In our news columns a despatch states that five to one has been offered in Ottawa that the government would win, but with no takers. The most that the Conservatives hope is to decrease the government majority of 44. To effect that small glory they think themselves justified in ob structive tactics that have forced dissolution and thrown the country into the turmoil of a premature and unnecessary election.

TWO OF MANY MISTAKES.

Mr. Borden, leader of the Opposition, issued a manifesto on the announcement of dissolution. This was a formal document, an appeal to the country, based on his conception of the situation and is supposed to be reliable as to facts. But Mr. Borden made two mistakes or rather misstatements. He said that parliament was dissolved without being prorogued. Whatever importance this statement may have been, it is not correct. A proclamation by the Governor-General was issued proroguing parliament till Sept. 7. Mr. Borden tries to place upon the government the responsibility of the failure to redistribute the constituencies. He complains that, as he suggested, the census was not taken earlier in order to hasten redistribution. Mr. Borden makes this misleading statement with full knowledge of the fact, that the Census Act, to whose passage Mr. Borden consented, fixes the date at which a census shall be taken, as the month of June in each year, and a census cannot lawfully be taken sooner or later. At any rate the census was taken early enough to permit of a well considered redistribution act being passed in full readiness for a general election at the regular time—in 1913—but not in time for an election precipitated by the political trickery of obstruction. Mr. Borden is forced to distort the record in order to present a plausible case.

SHEER HYPOCRISY.

The Mail and Empire with crocodile tears is bewailing the fate of the farmers who are to be compelled to leave the reaper and the plough to broil in the heat of an election contest in September.

The Mail and Empire is hypocritical from the heels up. Through the rules of parliament, the Conservatives are responsible for the dissolution and the election. By a course of obstruction they have prevented the voting of supply—money to carry on the public service. They and they alone are responsible for the dissolution and the election. The government did not want an election; because, according to the Confederation Act, the life of the eleventh Parliament would last till Oct. 26, 1913. The government did not want dissolution, for there was no question that demanded popular pronouncement. The reciprocity agreement was the chief debatable question, and parliament was perfectly competent to decide that question. But the opposition did not want a vote which would probably carry. They therefore staved off a vote by obstruction and frivolous dilatory motions.

The Conservative opposition have forced a dissolution and an election for the sake of party advantage alone. They have done this in the face of a decided injustice to Western Canada. The redistribution following a census would have given the west increased representation. The number of members would be increased from 32 to probably 52. The west is practically solid for reciprocity, and the Conservative opposition feared that redistribution and a vote in a year or so hence would give the government such additoinal strength as would make them more formidable than ever. It was their cue to prevent redistribution by forcing an election, trusting to the chapter of accidents, to draw some party advantage from the situation.

Besides, the government has precedent for a September election. They have brought on the election now because they were compelled to do so; but in 1878 Sir John Macdonald brought on a general election on September 10 and 17, at a time when no emergency demanded the selection of so early a date. But the election is now on, and the people have to make their choice and give their verdict on reciprocity. No Conservative obstruction can prevent a vote on reciprocity at the polls, though every effort will be made to obscure the issue, and lug in race and creed cries. By an unholy alliance with the "Nationalists" of Quebec, the Conservatives of Ontario will bring it about that Laurier is denounced in Quebec as being too British, while he will be denounced in Ontario as being un-British. A beautiful game, isn't it?

THE CONSTITUTIONAL ISSUE.

Mr. Borden's manifesto is a curiosity. After clamouring for a dissolution, the Opposition suddenly discovers that dissolution is an outrage. After obstructing the business of Parliament by every means in its power, the Opposition suddenly discovers that it is an outrage that the business of Parliament should not proceed, that supplies should not be granted, that the Oliver charges should not be investigated, and that the constituencies should not be redistributed before dissolution.

The Opposition has got itself into an absurd and absolutely untenable position Either the parliamet just expired was competent to do business or it was not. And if it was competent to do business it was competent to ratify the reciprocity agreement. If it was not competent to do that, it was competent to do nothing, and an immediate dissolution was the only alterative. The Opposition is dreaming of a half-way course that is absolutely unheard of in British Parliamentary procedure. Parliament, according to its imagination, was to be neither alive nor dead, but half-dead—able to transact such business as the minority desired, but unable to pass upon such business as the majority desired. The minority was to be all-powerful, the majority powerless. The minority was to pick and choose among the items of business, and declare what laws should be rejected, what laws should be delayed, and for what time, and exactly when dissolution should take place. This is surely a reversal of the principles of responsible government.

A premature dissolution is justifiable only for the purpose of taking the opinion of the people on a particular question. If dissolution is determined upon for that purpose, it must be an immediate dissolution, not a dissolution deferred until other business is disposed of. Otherwise there would be no guarantee that the voice of the people would be heard upon the very issue for which dissolution is ordered. Reciprocity is now before the people for six months and would have been disposed of by the vote of Parliament if it had not been for obstruction. If Parliament is not allowed to decide according to the will of the majority, the people must decide, and decide at once, not at some future time dictated by the minority in Parliament. There is no escape from this conclusion, and the Opposition will find that its attempt to take a half-way course will be as futile as its attempt to persuade the people that they will be injured by the removal of obstruction to trade.—Toronto Star.

THE NAVAL ARRANGEMENT.

When Canada, by the establishment of a navy, removed the reproach that we were sharing the defence afforded by the imperial navy without contributing our fair share, the jingoistic opponents of the Government's policy, declared that the action taken to establish a Canadian navy, under the control of the Canadian Parliament was the first step in separation from the Empire. This argument was combatted, and it was shown that Canada's course was quite consistent with continued connection with the Empire, which would not be weakened, but strengthed by a further assertion and recognition of Canadian autonomy. The tent of the agreement reached at the recent Imperial Conference, shows that instead of separation there will be strengthened connection, and coordination, and co-operation. When the statesmen of the Empire got together they had no difficulty in reaching the agreement that the navy of Canada, as well as of Australia—"the naval forces and services of the dominions of Canada and Australia will be exclusively under control of their respective governments." The feeling was unanimous that the only principle upon which local navies could be created and maintained was the principle of leaving the people, who are to pay for the local navies, the control over their expenditure for naval purposes. Sir Wilfrid Laurier's idea in establishing a Canadian navy was thatCanada's contribution to imperial defence should be primarily a navy for the defence of Canada, thus relieving the Imperial Government of important expenditure and demands upon her naval forces in fulfilling this service. This principle was recognised by the Imperial Conference, which definitely fixed the area of action in which the Canadian navy, for purposes of home defence, was to operate. There are two of these zones of action, one on the Atlantic, and one on the Pacific Coast, thus giving the Canadian navy a definite field of operation. But what is important is the decision arrived at unanimously, that while the Canadian and Australian navies will be local navies, managed by, and controlled by their respective governments, they will still be integral parts of the Imperial navy, just as much as the respective fleets detaild for service at the various stations are parts of the Imperial navy—acting separately in times of peace, but cooperating in the emergency of war. The Canadian and Australian navies will fly the same flag as the ships of the Royal navy, and the training and discipline of the local navies will be the same as in the Imperial navy. They will be under command of the British Government in case of hostilities, and in times of peace be devoted to local defence service. This is quite consistent with Sir Wilfrid Laurier's declamation that "when Britain is at war Canada is at war." We have said to Great Britain: "We have relieved you of the work of defending our shores and protecting our fisheries and trade interests in times of peace, but when the stress of war comes we are with you if you need our services." There is coordination and cooperation when imperial interests demand united action.

MR. LILLICRAP'S LETTER.

The manly and patriotic letter from the pen of Mr. J. F. Lillicrap, of Lakefield, in supporting reciprocity, which appeared in the Globe of Saturday, July 29th, and was reproduced in the columns of the Examiner yesterday, will doubtless have a marked effect in the Reciprocity contest in the present election.

Mr. Lillicrap, who is a life-long Conservative, and well known resident of Lakefield, emphasizes in his able letter that he is carrying out the true principles of the Conservative party in supporting a policy in reciprocity in natural products. Sir John Macdonald supported this policy, and it was the key note of the campaign of 1891, which preceded his death.

Many stalwart Conservatives, both in East and West Peterborough, will see as the campaign progresses, that it is their present party leaders who have deserted the old-time Conservative principles, and there will be many in every polling sub-division, both in East and West Peterborough and throughout the country, who will take the stand that Mr. Lillicrap, Hon. Mr. Haultain, Conservative leader in Saskatchewan, and other Conservatives, have taken in supporting the present reciprocity movement.

In East Peterborough, Mr. Sexsmith has made the mistake of his life in being stampeded by the "interests' into taking a stand detrimental to the agricultural interests, as well as the best interests of the country. He seems to have listened and obeyed the voice of the high protectionist, rather than the call of the farming community. The electors of East Peterborough will not forget the mistake he has made.

AN ENEMY'S TRIBUTE.

The Belleville Intelligencer — Sir Mackenzie Bowell's paper — makes this kindly reference to Sir Wilfrid Laurier:

"No man in Canadian public life has received more attention at the hands of political calumniators. In forty years, however, no opponent has been so base as to utter a slander which touched his personal honour, the purity of his private life, or the righteousness of his character."

Yet, the Intelligencer and its Conservative allies are ready to rend Sir Wilfrid Laurier, limb from limb, because, in the first place, he is a Liberal, and, in the second place, because he is of French ancestry. Yet, the Intelligencer, and the order its proprietor stands for, are working with the Nationalists of Quebec, the deadly foes of all things British, and imeprial, in order to wreck Sir Wilfrid.

WHAT DEVELOPMENT DOES.

(Montreal Herald.)

	1898.	1910
Products of the mine	$8,000,000	$40,000,000
Grain	6,000,000	57,000,000
Flour	1,000,000	15,000,000

In these figures, which are for the exports of the commodities mentioned in the years indicated, we get the explanation of most of what is happening all around us here in Montreal. Fifteen years ago there was a return to Canada of seventeen millions; last year we had all that to work on and ninety-five millions more.

It is a direct result of the policy of development, this clear gain of almost a hundred millions a year. And Montreal gets so much the largest share of the resulting benefits that we have now on this island one in every twelve or thirteen people in the Dominion, where thirty or forty years ago we had only one in thirty-five.

Population and prosperity have come to Montreal because of the development, on the prairies and in the rocky parts of the Dominion, which began with the loan in aid of the construction of the Crows Nest Pass railway and which has since centred all eyes on the wheat fields of the West.

Reciprocity means that the acceleration of this development will proceed faster than ever, that the influence upon Montreal will be intensified. The West has had the greatest advertisement any field for settlement ever received. Mr. Taft wrote it, Congress endorsed it, and the inquiries are coming into Ottawa faster than they can be answered. The chariot is rolling along, keep it rolling.

FARMER V. MANUFACTURER.

(Brantford Expositor)

The Montreal Herald, commenting on the warning note which the Finance Minister has given the Canadian manufacturers, says:

Mr. Fielding has nothing to apologise for in the remarks he made about the influence of Canadian manufacturers on the reciprocity issue. Every Canadian manufacturer knows, from fifteen years of salutary experience, that there is none of the running amuck habit about Mr. Fielding. He has given them good measure, heaped up and running over, even when carrying the fiscal system of the country closer to the revenue tariff basis. He has favoured them most as against their most immediately dangerous competitors. He brought in the anti-dumping law to still further ensure stability. He has played no favourites, but has done his level best to give every interest its chance. The manufacturers know it, and amongst themselves admit it.

Mr. Fielding has demonstrated his right to be regarded by the manufacturers of Canada as their friend, and to ask that it should be believed that in entering into the reciprocity pact he not only did not disregard their interests, but carefully considered them. This fact will be made clear if, by any mischance, reciprocity should be defeated at the polls, and the Canadian farmers be made to feel that they were denied a measure which they believed to be most beneficial to them, and yet could have brought no real injury to the manufacturers. No better opportunity than the present was ever presented of producing a kindly feeling between the manufacturing and agricultural interests of Canada, and there was possibly never so great danger that they may be driven into hostile and warring camps.

SAGE TEA WILL DARKEN THE HAIR

Restore Faded and Gray Hair to Natural Color—Dandruff Quickly Removed.

There is nothing new about the idea of using sage for restoring the color of the hair. Our great-grandmothers kept their locks soft, dark and glossy by using a "sage tea." Whenever their hair fell out or took on a dull, faded or streaked appearance they made a brew of sage leaves and applied it to their hair, with wonderfully beneficial effect.

Nowadays we don't have to resort to old-time, tiresome methods of gathering the herbs and making the tea. This is done by skillful chemists better than we could do it ourselves, and all we have to do is to call for the ready-made product, Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy, containing sage in the proper strength, with the addition of sulphur, another old-time scalp remedy.

The manufacturers of this remedy authorize druggists to sell it under guarantee that the money will be refunded if it fails to do exactly as represented.

This preparation is offered to the public at fifty cents a bottle, and is recommended and sold by all druggists.

Local Management Promise the Baseball Tit-bit of the Season---The Visitors Probably the Hardest Hitting Team in Toronto.

"It will be a nice game, but I hardly think you can beat them," quoth Leo Downs on Saturday when he was informed that the Dufferins were coming to town on Saturday next for a game of ball with the locals. And Leo should know what he is talking about, for the same Dufferins have on divers occasions swathed his offerings to the many corners of the ball park in Toronto. It required a vast amount of dickering with a veneer of much real money to induce the aforesaid ball-tossers to come to Peterboro, and it is to be hoped that the local management will receive the encouragement, which means the patronage of the fans. The visitors have in their ranks a few of the best hitters in Toronto, and since the Petes have a few swat artists of their own, Saturday's game will be a real ball game. The locals will have Ahearne back in the game on Saturday, and they are counting on him for his usual contribution to the box score. Jimmy has found his batting eye for sure, as was demonstrated in the game played in Bowmanville, when he had the outfielders chasing his bingles to the uttermost corners of the tire-makers' park. The fans are beginning to enjoy the game here now, as the weak clubs have been sidetracked, and it is the intention of the management to secure only good baseball attractions for the remaining Saturday afternoons.

Chance's Peerless Machine As Seen In Their Prime By A Local Enthusiast

Reminiscences of Once Great Aggregation---Impressions of a Fan on Seeing His First Big Game

The reports of the wreck of the once great Cub machine, brings to my mind recollections of the first major league ball game I ever saw. It was towards the end of July in 1909, and Chance's merry men had returned from a long invasion east. The trip had been attended with more than average success. Reulbach, who was this year offered for sale, had pitched fourteen straight victories and things looked rosy for the pennant. On Wednesday morning the club arrived in Chicago, and in the afternoon a friend took me in his machine to the game. To define my feelings on the trip to the grounds is impossible. Imagine a fellow who had been following the destinies of Peterborough's modest club from the time he was in knee breeches and bare feet, at which time Dan McCabe, Jack Connors, Bill Grady, Dr. Andy Scott, Jack Sheridan, Chris. Graham and others now retired from the diamond, were in their prime and in that interval, devouring with hungry eyes the newsy paragraph exploiting the lives and works of the great ball tossers, riding in an auto two blocks from the Cubs' park, about to see the greatest team in the world. There was nothing to say some indefinable germ or group of germs had entered my system and I was one nervous wreck. Fifteen thousand people were there on that bright July afternoon, and it seemed to me that they were nearly all as badly affected as I was.

I saw my friend hand his auto over to a negro to be put in a neighbouring shed until after the game. He then got in line and bought seats at seventy-five cents apiece. We walked upstairs and I looked for the first time upon a major league diamond. Six-teen or eighteen Cubs were disporting themselves upon that lovely field as level as a billiard table. By the way if you ever go to a big league game, buy a real good seat. The fans are enthusiastic in the stand but not noisy. It is the greatest brotherhood in the world; every man wants to see everything that is going on and he wants the fellow rubbing elbows with him to share his knowledge to the full. A few of the things we don't see over at Riverside we see here. There is the pop corn, candy, peanuts and fizzy water boy, not to mention the boy selling programmes, score cards, cushions, pennants and other side lines.

Right under our eyes the pitchers are warming up. And such a fine collection of arms those manipulators of the pill have, too. There were, I think, four or five of them throwing to the extra catchers and utility men and the spank of the horsehide into the big deckers was music to my ears. On the diamond that great little team, Tinker and Evers are pulling off their vaudeville stunts, and it is worth the price of admission to see them alone. The preliminary work-outs are held under the supervision of the managers who select the pitchers definitely after seeing them warm up. A gong to our right rings and the home team takes the field. The umps. announce the batteries to the stand and the game is on.

A friend of mine who had seen the Cubs in action during the world's series the preceding fall never tired talking of them. I saw them play several games and I think after seeing all of them, that it was a wonderful machine, probably the world's best, but, believe me, that particular game was a very poor contest. Chance, rated as the "Peerless Leader" made three errors of the extremely juicy type. Evers had two and Tinker two, while Overall, who did the pitching, was severely pummelled, although he hit the first home run I ever saw in the big league.

To make a long story short, the Cubs lost 5-2, and I was disappointed at the brand of ball put up. A sympathetic fan, who said he hailed from Pennsylvania, told he that it was the long railway trip home that had taken the starch out of the champions, and concluded his advice by remarking confidentially, "Don't worry; son, they'll come to-morrow. We'll likely have old three-fingers in the box and the Phillies will be easy picking for him." And his line of talk proved to be a good line, for they "came".

Old Father Time has wrought sad havoc with that lovely team, and many of the then stars no longer don the baseball garments in the club house owned by Chas. Murphy, yet the sights I witnessed on that memorable day, from the frisking athletes in grey flannel uniforms, to the orderly congregation who sucked cooling beverages through straws and applauded to the echo the nifty pick-ups and running catches, will not be effaced from my memory for some time.

BASEBALL

Deacon Jim McGuire of the Cleveland Athletics who started playing ball when the only mitts used were warts and tough cuticle, threw up the management of the Naps on May 3 of this year, saying that with the crew behind him he couldn't deliver the goods. George Stovall, only an ordinary first baseman, was made temporary manager and he has made a howling success of the job. He has given Cleveland the first real team it has had since 1908, when they finished at the wrong end of the first division clubs. But what is most important to the office hands of that institution is the fact that the club is playing better than ever, and it is a cinch that Stovall will not only hold down the job permanently, but that his pay envelope will be a more fit subject for the obesity cure next season.

The smaller leagues are all falling into line as regards the double umpire system. The latest to join the ranks is the Southern League, whose president has decided to work that system in the future.

More than fifteen years in the major leagues and still rated among the shining stars of the baseball firmament. That is the record attained by Fred Clarke, manager of the Pittsburg Nationals, and Rhoderick Wallace, manager of the St. Louis Americans. Both men are actively engaged in the great game, in fact both have played day in and day out for over fifteen years. Some may contend that old Cy. Young is entitled to the laurels for baseball longevity, but the veteran pitcher, although he has been pitching twenty-one years, has only participated in 1000 games, while Wallace has been presenting himself before major league populaces for nineteen years, in which he has participated in close to 3,000 games. Wallace is the only infielder who has stuck across the nineteen year stretch.

The Midland League team will practise this evening at Riverside. A full attendance is desired, as next Saturday's game will be the hardest of the season.

THE VAGARIES OF AN APARTMENT HOUSE

"I don't see what in the world we shall ever do with all our things," sighed Mrs. Hemming, when she and her husband decided, after much discussion, to move from their house, which was too lonesomely big, now that the children had all gone away to homes of their own. "Our apartment won't begin to hold our furniture, to say nothing of all the things we have stored in the attic."

"Pick out the furniture you need and then turn a second-hand man loose in the house," suggested Hemming.

"But, Charles, you wouldn't want me to sell all the old keepsakes would you?"

"Most assuredly. What earthly use to anyone are a lot of old books, vases and pictures that no one ever looks at except at house cleaning time? Do they do anybody any good?"

"No, I don't suppose they do," reluctantly admitted Mrs. Hemming, "but I hate to part with some of them."

"That's just sentiment, my dear. The fact is, it will be a relief to you when you are rid of all that old lumber."

"Perhaps I could select just a few of the oldest things and we could put them in the storeroom of the apartment. You know there's a nice big storeroom, Charles."

"Yes, I know it, Harriet, and I'm planning to keep my golf clubs there and my fishing tackle. So if you please, we won't fill up that storeroom with a lot of useless trash."

After the second-hand dealer's visit Hemming said to his wife: "I hope you were sufficiently strong-minded to let everything in the attic go?"

"Well, nearly everything," answered Mrs. Hemming. "There are a few little articles that it seems a shame to sell, such as—"

"Never mind enumerating them, Harriet. I shouldn't be interested in a list of crippled furniture or ancient photograph albums."

"But what I thought of keeping was the two old—"

"Now, Harriet, we decided to get rid of all our old stuff. Don't let Hankins leave a thing tomorrow when he comes with his wagons."

When the wagons drove away loaded with furniture and bric-a-brac, mostly of a peculiarly inartistic period, Mrs. Hemming laughed away her regrets. "Charles was right," she said to herself. "It would have been silly to keep that ugly trumpery."

About a fortnight after they were settled in their apartment, Hemming came home one afternoon carrying a large box.

"I have a little present for you, Harriet," he said with boyish pleasure. "You'll be surprised when you see what is it. I was passing Devlin's antique shop this morning when some things in the window caught my eye and took me back about 40 years to the time when I was courting a certain pretty girl in her grandmother's best parlour, which was lighted with green glass lamps. There, my dear, what do you think of these?" He triumphantly drew from the box two large green glass lamps of old-fashioned shape and decoration. "Do they make you think of anything, Harriet?"

"Yes, they do—they make me think of a lot of things," she answered. "How much did you pay for them?"

"Devlin let me have them cheap. You see, one of the collectors picked them up for little or nothing in an old out of the way, Vermont farmhouse, where antiquities aren't appreciated, so he sold me the pair for $20. Really, Harriet, I'd have given $30 if he'd asked it."

"Well, I'm glad he didn't ask it," remarked Mrs. Hemming, "for I sold these same lamps to Hankins three weeks ago for $1 apiece."

"Great Scott! Are you sure they're the same lamps?"

"Of course I'm sure. I'd know them if you bought them in Egypt. I was brought up under those lamps."

"A dollar apiece! And I snapped them up for $20 the pair!" mused Hemming, trying not to look sheepish.

"Yes, and I'm glad you did," responded Mrs. Hemming. "For they were what I hated to part with most. I wanted to keep them and I'm awfully glad to have them back."—Chicago News.

RICHARD HALL & SON

DAIRY NEWS FROM ALL PARTS OF THE DOMINION---LOCAL

Many grade cows are making good records this season. One near Cassel Ont., has given over 200 pounds of butter fat in three and a half months.

In the cow testing associations at Warsaw, Enniskmore, Cassel and Tayside, Ont., the average yield of all cows tested for June is over 35pounds of butter fat.

Eight associations in Quebec average over 30 pounds of fat per cow.

But a good many herds in Ontario and Quebec average less than 700 pounds of milk and 24 pounds of butter fat during June.

In Prince Edward Island the highest average yield for June is at Kensington, where the 150 cows included in the dairy record centre' there give 787 pounds of milk, 3.7 test, and 31 pounds of fat. Included at this centre are several individual cows giving over 900 pounds of milk and 35 pounds of fat. One of the best yields is from a 7 year old grade Shorthorn giving over 1,120 pounds of milk and 40 pounds of fat. But hard by these good records are found poor yields of only 300 pounds of milk and 18 pounds of fat from six and seven year old cows that freshened in April and May.

Between yields of 40 and 18 pounds of fat in one month there is too great a difference to be overlooked. It is all the difference between a very satisfactory return, and no adequate payment whatever for all the energy, time, feed and care expended on cows that are not capable of making money for their unfortunate owners. Conserve your energy by keeping better cows. You cannot afford to keep a herd of only medium capacity.

Cow testing pays abundantly, for it shows which cows are making a good profit, and again which cows cannot by any strength of imagination be considered in the same category.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

YOU are angry. "Hurt," you call it. As a matter of fact, that way of expressing it is merely a graceful fashion of implying that the blame of your disgruntled state of mind belongs with someone else.

And in the absence of the friend who has angered, or rather "hurt" you, you are going over in your mind your side of the case.

You mentally rehearse what you would like to say to her:

"I had a headache when I got up and yet I worked hard all day," you justify yourself. "And then everything went wrong. There I walked way down to the dressmakers in the broiling sun and she disappointed me, and then just as I was trying to get a little nap, that woman from the Church called to ask if I wouldn't give something for the next supper, and to cap the climax, that meat for dinner was bad and I had to walk way down to the market for more and the man was rude to me. So when she called me up, I was just as tired and nervous as I could be and my head was simply splitting. And to have her say that she thought I ought to do something more on that committee was just the last straw. When you think of what I've done already. And now she thinks I ought to say I'm sorry I spoke out as I did. Goodness, I think it's she that ought to be sorry. And I thought she was fond of me. If she knew all I've been through with to-day and all I've done on that old committee, I guess she'd feel ashamed of the way she spoke."

Such is your natural train of thought.

From it you emerge more "hurt" than ever and more determined not to say you are sorry, but instead to extort such an admission from her.

I know, you see, for I've travelled on the same train.

But listen, my friend. From the same station from which that train departs, another one goes out at the same moment. Very few people take it, so if you do, you will have a novel experience.

It is the train of thought that leads into the land of the other side of the question.

That is, instead of trying to marshal all the conditions that make you excusable, this time you are to try to marshal all the conditions that make your friend excusable.

You are to say to yourself, "She is really much more tired than I am. She works under a terrific strain all the time in that hurried, noisy, hot office. Besides, this is just the last week before her vacation and she is at the end of her rope. And then she has had that anxiety about her mother the last few months. I suppose, too, the chairmanship of that committee was altogether too much for her to have to do, and besides she didn't really know how much I had done. It was easy to see from what she said that some one had deceived her or made a mistake. So I suppose she thought she was being perfectly reasonable and when I snapped out so, she felt that I was unjust. And then she didn't know how tired I was and that I had a headache and anyway she may have had a terrible hard day herself. So I suppose she has some reason for thinking I ought to say I'm sorry."

Altogether, your grievance has a very different aspect when you emerge from this train of thought, hasn't it?

And yet the facts haven't changed a bit—only your way of looking at them and for them.

Which train will you take, my friend?

Yes, it certainly requires more courage and altruism and more of a sense of justice and fairness, than the average person has to climb into that second train.

But surely you are glad of an opportunity to prove that you have all that?

North Monaghan Council Proposed By-law For The Improvement Of Streets

A Busy Session of the North Monaghan Council---A Committee of the Council Was Appointed to Deal With the Sidewalk Petitions---Will Call Another Meeting.

A meeting of the North Monaghan Council was held at May's schoolhouse, July 24th, 1911. All the members present.

On motion of Messrs. Forster and Robson the council went into committee of the whole to deal with the Byersville sidewalk petition, with the reeve in the chair.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed.

On motion of Messrs. May and Forster the reeve was appointed to inquire into the sidewalk petitions re Lock and Lansdowne streets.—Carried.

The clerk reported that the owners assessed by the last revised assessment roll of the township affected by the local improvement by-law, No. 641, were as follows:

On Monaghan road, west side—H. Rusaw, E. Lockington, W. J. Byers, Alex. Archibald, W. J. Northey, R. S. Trew, George H. Hay, and the assessment value of their property is $6,150.00. They being all the owners except one holding a vacant lot affected or benefitted by the local improvement by-law now proposed, and that two-thirds of the said property owners have affixed their names to a petition asking for said council of North Monaghan to build a cement sidewalk from Frank street south to Brown street, and that the said sidewalk be paid for by a tax on the said property each and every year for a period of twenty years, and that debentures be issued for same covering all expenses, interest, etc., in connection with the same. The crossing over Chamberlain Wilcox to be paid for by the township.

Bradburn's office to-day, and, owing to another name being added to the petition, it was considered necessary to call another meeting of the council, the committee have power only to deal with the portion formerly proposed.

NARROW ESCAPE FROM A HORRIBLE DEATH

Little Daughter of Mr. James Boughen Fell Asleep in Grain Field and Was Badly Injured by a Reaper

PORT HOPE, JULY 29.—The three-year-old daughter of Mr. Jas. Boughen, Dale, met with a terrible accident yesterday afternoon. The little tot was playing about in the field, where the men were busy cutting grain. Suddenly she disappeared and the men supposed she had gone home, but instead the little one had fallen among the grain and, being tired, went to sleep. Soon the reaper made a trip over this section and the driver was horrified when the cries of the little girl told him what had happened. Fortunately the knives were not extra low, or doubtless the child would have been cut to pieces. As it is her injuries are very severe. Her hand and arm are a mass of cuts and she is likely to lose some fingers. The hip is broken and she is very weak from the shock.

Drs. Forrest and Clemesha are in attendance, and while her condition is very serious they expect her to recover.

EXCITING EXPERIENCE OF BERRY PICKERS---BUGGY SMASHED

On Friday evening some Peterborough berry pickers engaged a horse and rig from one of the liveries in Peterborough, and drove out to Mr. McIntosh's berry patch on the boundary line in Cavan. In the evening, when they were on their way home, in some way the horse either became unmanageable or the drivers were not experienced, and the horse reared up, tipped the rig into the ditch and upset the occupants. The rig was considerably broken up, so much so that they had to engage Mr. Crowe to bring them to their homes, which he did, arriving in Peterborough about midnight. Their day's labour was lost with a great deal of expense. On Saturday morning the livery man came for his rig and found it considerably dilapidated.

All berry pickers have their own experiences. It made rather a long day from early morning until midnight. The young man driver, the two ladies, two boys and little girl were none the worse of their experience, but don't think they will go berry picking for a while again.

OCCUPIED PULPIT

Rev. Mr. Henderson of Charlotte street Methodist church, occupied the pulpit at Springville Presbyterian church at both the morning and evening service Sunday, and on both occasions was listened to by large congregations.

A "CURE"? FOR BALDNESS

The above expression is one which is used frequently in connection with hair preparations. Just exactly what is meant by it in each instance is a question. Baldness is not a disease and hence, does not permit of a cure. It is a result invariably to be traced to the dandruff germ and if the condition has become chronic, that is, if there is complete atrophy of the hair follicles, a "cure" is absolutely impossible.

Approaching baldness, seen in falling hair, may always be checked and if the hair follicles are not atrophied the hair may be induced again to grow.

This is accomplished by regular applications of Newbro's Herpicide which cleanses the scalp and kills the dandruff germ. The destruction of the germ does away with the accumulations of scarf skin and thus eliminates the most common enemy to beautiful hair.

Soft, glossy, fluffy hair cannot grow on a scalp infested with dandruff any more than a delicate plant can grow on an ash heap. The scalp must be kept clean and free from dandruff. The best remedy for doing this is Newbro's Herpicide which receives the highest endorsements from professional men, the stage and the best people everywhere.

Herpicide is sold and guaranteed in one dollar size bottles by all druggists. Applications obtained at all first class barber shops and hair dressing parlours.

Chemong News

CHEMONG, JULY 31.—Rev. H. R. Trumpour of All Saints' conducted service in the pavilion yesterday afternoon

The high wind of last week brought back a few more boggy islands from the head of the lake, and some of the best bathing places are spoiled.

The Chemong Park Baseball Club accompanied by about sixty spectators, in a flotilla of launches, went to the Indian Village on Saturday, and were defeated, getting the short end of an 8-7 score The Park boys had the Ojibways standing on their heads for seven innings, at which stage the homesters got busy with the Spalding and hit the ball to all the corners of the lot. M. O'Brien of the Peterborough Club, made a mighty home-run in the eighth, sending the ball clear into an adjoining field. Mr. Ball of the Prak, handled the indicator, and gave good satisfaction.

The nightly dances in the cottages and pavilion are well patronized.

Mr. M. E. Carter, of Toronto, Mr. Jas. Lynch of Peterborough, and Mr. Ball of New York, took a little fishing trip on Friday last, and hooked a few real big bass. Mr. Lynch caught one all by himself. At the conclusion of the trip shore dinner was held off Kelley's Island.

Mr. and Mrs. D. O'Connell spent Sunday in the Park.

The conviction of the young rowdies who threw a bottle at the auto 'bus meets with the unanimous approval of Park residents, who feel that the example made of that pair will put a stop to such dangerous nonsense.

INQUEST RESUMED

night in talking over their trouble, and looking over the papers they had been served with.

During the night they also talked of the slander action, and Mr. Harrison stated that she seemed not to be able to tell how she was standing in the matter. He had sold 20 young fat cattle to a party in Montreal for which he received $1,100.00. He gave the money to her, but never could find out where it went, and he stated that he had no more knowledge of where it was at that time than the Coroner who was questioning him. He could only find out that she cashed the cheque in the Dominion Bank. He said that he sold the cattle in June, and never made any enquiries where the money was, thinking that she had paid these debts to the Bank, etc., with it. Mr. Harrison stated that they talked about the business until 4 o'clock in the morning, and then he went out to get the horses, and previous to that she had not been out of his sight. He asked her what she did with the money, and she would not give him a satisfactory reply, in fact he thought that she did not want to tell. She claimed to him that the $800.00 had been paid to the Bank, and he inferred that she paid it out of the $1,100.00, but she told him that she did not pay all the note as she had neglected to get her old note back, and he knew of no other money with which she had to pay the note.

Found Poison.

Previous to this, he stated that he had looked around, but had found nothing but a few old notes, etc., but on Sunday morning the little girl was sweeping the floor, and found a package of strychnine. And Mr. Harrison stated that he had found out later that she had purchased fifteen grains at a local drug store, on May 27th, where they dealt. Mr. Harrison further stated that she had complained to him of the crows stealing the chickens and spoke of poisoning them with Paris green. He said that he had a letter from his sister, Mrs. Howitt, of Western Ontario, and she remarked that "Emma," (his wife) was prepared to die. He stated that this set him thinking, although he did not know what his sister meant by the remark. The paper was not folded, when the little girl found it. Mr. Harrison went on to state that Mrs. Harrison had often remarked to him that she would cut the slander action short, but he did not know what she meant. Mr. Harrison stated that after she had died, and he had arranged with an undertaker, he went to Peterborough to see into the matter with the Bank, and had tea with a woman that night by the name of Mrs. King, where Mrs. Harrison often used to call. He got home that night about 9 o'clock. Mr. Harrison said that she did not use any poison for crows to his knowledge.

Mr. Harrison assumed a very unconcerned air while under examination and yawned repeatedly.

Albert Howden's Evidence.

Mr. Howden stated that by some means he had been considered as being connected with the slander case, and for that reason he and Mr. Harrison were not on the best of terms, and Mr. Harrison always wanted to talk about the slander, and the disgrace it made in the country, but never made any threat to his knowledge.

Mrs. King's Story.

Mrs. King's evidence was as follows:

Mrs. Harrison used to get sewing done at my house, and she was in Peterborough the Wednesday before she died. She spoke to me several times about this slander action, and stated that she would have to clear herself of it. She often told me that she did not care who believed it if her husband did not, but he said he would pay the cost if she would go ahead.

She said once to me that if she did not clear herself of it, it just meant her life. She told me that her husband was good to her, and the only time he got vexed was the time when the story got out. Mrs. Harrison discussed their business with me the night before her death. She told me of a three or four hundred dollar debt she had paid to a Dr. Montgomery, and the last day she was in, she told me that she had won her case, and I took it for granted that that was settled. We were speaking of mice and rats that day, and she told me that she had bought poison, but she never spoke of suicide, except she often said that she would rather be dead."

Little Flora Davis' Story.

"I have lived with Mr. and Mrs. Harrison for some time, and on Sunday morning was sweeping the floor, and found a paper of strychnine beside the stove; I took it to Mr. Harrison, and he asked me then if I had ever heard Mrs. Harrison speaking of poisoning herself, but I had not. I saw a cup on the top of the stove, and it was the same kind as the one she drank out of that morning at the pump. When they brought Mrs. Harrison back that morning, I heard her say "dead" just as she was carried in the door, and when they brought her upstairs I heard her call 'Bobby' and 'mother', and then she was soon in convulsions"

'Bobby' Harrison's Story.

Eleven-year-old Bobby Harrison, son of the deceased, next gave evidence. He was in bed, sleeping, that night, and did not hear any noise down stairs. He said he remembered his mother purchasing some stuff in a bottle some time ago. It had a reddish wrapper on it and a green top, but he could not see the contents.

Mr. McDermid then told of her getting the poison, and stating that she was going to poison the crows.

Mr. Madill Gave No Reason for Trouble.

Mr. Joseph Madill was then examined. He stated that he was not aware that there was any slander suit for some time. He knew that there was trouble, and left the matter in the hands of his lawyer, and her lawyers wanted to settle the case, and he got a letter to that effect. Mr. Madill stated that he never heard any person threaten to kill Mrs. Harrison, and the last time he spoke to Mrs. Harrison was the first Sunday in May. Up to the time of the trouble they were good friends, and he said that he could prove that he never said anything or did anything to make bad friends, but as that was not material it was not gone into. Mr. Madill stated that as far as he knew Mr. and Mrs. Harrison were on good terms with each other.

Mr. Benj. Johnston, who was working there, stated that the couple always seemed to be on friendly terms and get along well.

Mr. George Moncrief, who lives on the next farm, had the same remark to make.

Post Mortem Examination.

Dr. Amy's performed the Post Mortem examination, and made a very able report of it. He said that the stomach contained about an ounce of fluid, one of the kidneys was displaced, and there was a slight bruise over the heart. Death was caused by some agents, which resulted in the paralyzing of the heart, but the disease manifested itself which would cause death.

As the report from the Provincial Analyst was not to hand, the inquest had to be adjourned, as stated above.

WHERE RECIPROCITY HELPS THE CANADIAN FARMER

The main issue now before the country is the reciprocity agreement with the United States. By this agreement a large number of articles produced by the Canadian farmer are admitted to the United States free of duty, and the same articles from the United States have free entry into Canada. Great efforts will be made by the "special interests" to misrepresent reciprocity, as proposed under the agreement. It will be, therefore, a matter of interest to farmers, market gardeners, fruit growers, etc., to note the information contained in the following table, which shows the present duty on the several articles mentioned which are removed and given entrance duty free into the United States:

This great sweeping away of duties by the United States, if accepted by the people of Canada, as it surely will be, will mean millions upon millions of sheer gain every year to the producers of Canada. They will not gain the whole amount of the former duties, but a considerable proportion in each case. If a farmer is making a comfortable living now, will he hear without a laugh the voice of the orator who tells him to "let well enough alone" and refuse the proffer of an extra gain undreamed of before last winter? It is for the farmers to decide, as to the benefits of reciprocity, whether or not an enlarged market, without any tariff obstacles will be a benefit. Let the farmer of to-day consult with some veteran farmer who remembers the results of the reciprocity treaty of 1854-66. He will tell him that the United States market then was a great benefit, and it will be the same to-day under the proposed reciprocity agreement. It is to be remembered that the present reciprocity agreement is the first measure of tariff relief in the interests of the farmers since Confederation. Will the farmers reject the advantages offered? They will do so if they do not support the candidates of the government that is offering the reciprocity agreement—a wider market—to the farmers of Canada.

THIS CITY TO HAVE AN UP-TO-DATE CAFE

An up-to-date cafe with an orchestra in attendance, will be an innovation that will invade Peterborough some time in the near future.

Mr. N. Dourus, of the Boston Cafe, have secured the premises formerly owned by the proprietors of China Hall and will take possession to-morrow. They will have the place entirely refitted to suit the requirements of the business.

The second floor will be converted into a banquet hall. Altogether about $6000 will be expended in alterations.

Mr. Dourus has contemplated moving to a larger and more up-to-date premises for some time, as the large and ever increasing trade has outgrown the confines of the present establishment.

JULY WEATHER NOTES

The chief feature of the weather in the month just passed was the extreme heat that prevailed on a number of days during the first week, and to a lesser extent during the second week also. The first day of July was quite warm, 91 in the shade being registered. Next day was warmer still, 93 degrees being the figure. The following day (the 3rd) the mercury went up to 97 degrees. The heat was extreme, and we deluded ourselves with the thought that the limit had been reached, and that it could not be worse. The next day (the 4th) we had the comparatively comfortable temperature of 90 degrees. On the 5th, however, the thermometer did a stunt it had been thought incapable of performing, at least around Peterborough. Shortly after noon on that day it went up to 100 degrees in the shade, and stay remained there for several hours. Without doubt this was the hottest day ever experienced around these parts.

Three days of cooler conditions followed, then on the 9th we had it 94; 10th, 92; and 11th, 88 degrees. From that date to the end of the month more moderate temperatures prevailed.

The lowest temperature was on the 27th, when the thermometer was down to 44.4. The two preceding nights, and the following night, had low temperatures. Light white frost was said to have been seen on several of these mornings.

There was rain on 11 days. The total amount was 4 inches and 62-100 of an inch. There was thunder on 8 days, and hail on one. The storm of the 11th was the most severe for some time. Two inches and 17-100 fell from 12.30 to 3.00 p.m.—W.P.

Cow Tests For June

Some interesting figures taken from the June records of some of the local cow-testing associations are submitted below by Mr A. L. Andress, Recorder at Indian River:

In looking over the June records, some remarkable differences in the yields of individual cows are shown.

In the Enniskillen Association the best cow gave 1770 lbs. of milk and over 60 lbs. of fat; while the poorest cow gave 745 lbs. milk and about 26 lbs. fat, or less than half that produced by the best cow.

In the Trewern Association the best cow produced 1620 lbs. milk and over 56 lbs. of fat; while the lowest cow produced 570 lbs. milk and 16 lbs. fat.

At Shearer the best cow gave 1380 lbs. milk and 45½ lbs. fat; while the lowest cow gave 560 lbs. milk and 19 lbs. fat.

In the Warsaw Association the best cow gave 1140 lbs. milk and 52 lbs. fat; while the lowest cow gave 760 lbs. milk and 25 lbs. fat.

A herd of 8 cows in the Norwood Association has the high average of [illegible] lbs. milk and 44 lbs. fat. A herd like this should be an inspiration to every farmer.

TWO DEATHS FROM SEPTIC POISONING

NAPANEE, ONT., AUGUST 1st.—Within 15 minutes of each other, Hazel and Maude, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Shannon, Newburgh road, near Napanee, died of septic poisoning. The girls were 15 and 11 years of age, respectively.

One was taken ill two weeks ago, and the other developed the same trouble shortly afterwards. They were treated for tonsilitis, but when Dr. J. C. Connell, specialist of Kingston, was called on consultation, he pronounced the trouble septic poisoning, due to a defective sewer, which was afterwards located. Nothing could be done to save their lives.

How Internal Enemies Of Canada Are Playing The Double Game

(The Globe.)

The greatest and most powerful enemies of Canadian nationality are within the gates. They are the men who at every time of popular excitement seek to set race against race and creed against creed. The most conspicuous object of their venomous pursuit is Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Of undiluted Norman-French blood, he is the first citizen in a country in which men of British birth are in the majority. A Catholic, he holds the reins of government in a land where Protestants are dominant. He presents a shining mark for the poisoned arrow of racial and religious antagonism.

During the next six weeks in every part of Canada in which there is a prospect of injuring the Liberal party by such tactics it will be whispered that Laurier is over-mindful of his own. His loyalty to the Empire will be jeered at. Demagogues like George Tate Blackstock will have the hardihood to tell the people that Laurier and Fielding are conspiring against Canadian nationality. The Toronto Telegram, with the monotonous iteration of a caged parrot, will scream "Continentalist! Continentalist!" Behind tiled doors the brethren will be urged to vote against a Catholic Premier. The Belleville Intelligencer will continue to cement the unholy alliance between Ontario Toryism and Quebec Nationalism by declaring that "the Nationalists are preferable to the Laurier Liberals."

Who are the Nationalists whose alliance is so keenly desired by the former Grand Sovereign of the Orange Order? (Sir Mackenzie Bowell). What are their ideals? They are the most anti-British, the most frankly ultramontane propagandists that French Canada has ever seen. There is no concealment about their methods. They hate Sir Wilfrid Laurier and seek to destroy him for exactly the opposite reason put forward by their allies in Ontario. In this Province Laurier is to be destroyed because he is not British enough, because he does not safeguard Protestant rights. The Nationalists wish to destroy him because they assert that he has betrayed his race and his religion at the behest of the Orangemen of Ontario.

This is not a fanciful sketch of the situation. At a meeting at Fraserville, reported in Le Devoir of July 24, Mr. Armand Lavergne, the young orator who wore a garb of soberness and impartiality when he addressed the students of the University of Toronto some months ago is reported as follows:

"I shall address myself to the Rouges (grits). I hope to be able to convert some one. As for those who are not willing to understand, the party of honest men has no use for them."

"Here some one in the crowd cried: 'Hurrah for Laurier!'

"Yes, hurrah for Laurier, my friend! I also cried, as you do, Hurrah for Laurier! when in 1896 I heard him proclaim at St. Roch in Quebec that the great principle of the Liberal party was respect for minorities, and that when he obtained power he would do justice to our brothers of Manitoba. Some months later he sacrificed the Catholics of Manitoba to the 'Orangeist' fanatics. Hurrah for Laurier!

"Hurrah for Laurier, my friend! While in 1896 Mr. Brodeur wrote in Le Soir denouncing the purchase of rifles by the Tupper Government, three years afterward in 1899 Laurier despatched 5,000 Canadians to Africa to fight a little people who had never done anything to us, and who battled for their faith, their language and their liberty."

There is in the speech much more to the same effect deliberately intended to rouse racial feeling and to picture Laurier as an enemy of his own people. The most serious feature of the situation is that because of the differences in language few Ontario people read Le Devoir or other organs of Nationalism, and few French-Canadians read such papers as The Toronto Telegram, The Mail and Empire, or The Belleville Intelligencer. Were it not for the fact that the men in Quebec who denounce Laurier for sending troops to South Africa and for the settlement of the Manitoba school question are fairly confident that their incendiary utterances will never be reported in the Tory Press of Ontario there would be an end of such disgraceful methods of campaigning.

The Liberal party would be justified, as a means of stopping the racial and religious enemies of Canada from injuring the country, in posting on every dead wall in Ontario the evidence furnished by speeches like that of Mr Lavergne, which was made in Mr. Bourassa's presence, that Laurier is held up to the hatred of his own people for keeping the balance justly between English-speaking Protestant and French-speaking Catholic.

67 Wash Dresses in the Annex Wednesday at $1.69

Our sale of $1.69 Wash Dresses of 3 weeks ago was a record maker We had prepared liberally, but the forenoon practically cleared out the entire offering; and, as it was large, we have been trying to secure another lot equally as good. We have just succeeded in getting from a large Montreal manufacturer about 50 excellent garments; and have added from our regular stock, enough to make up the 67 garments. The lot includes Muslins and Ginghams, etc., in colours and white; some are factory samples and as such are somewhat soiled and mussed. Not a garment worth less than $3.50, quite a sprinkling of $4 50 and $5 dresses in the lot. These dresses will be displayed in our large centre window, Tuesday and Tuesday evening. WHERE RECIPROCITY HELPS THE CANADIAN FARMER

The main issue now before the country is the reciprocity agreement with the United States. By this agreement a large number of articles produced by the Canadian farmer are admitted to the United States free of duty, and the same articles from the United States have free entry into Canada. Great efforts will be made by the "special interests" to misrepresent reciprocity, as proposed under the agreement. It will be, therefore, a matter of interest to farmers, market gardeners, fruit growers, etc., to note the information contained in the following table, which shows the present duty on the several articles mentioned which are removed and given entrance duty free into the United States:

Articles	Present Tariff.	Under Reciprocity.
Cattle less than one year old	$3.00 per head	Free

This great sweeping away of duties by the United States, if accepted by the people of Canada, as it surely will be, will mean millions upon millions of sheer gain every year to the producers of Canada. They will not gain the whole amount of the former duties, but a considerable proportion in each case. If a farmer is making a comfortable living now, will he hear without a laugh the voice of the orator who tells him to "let well enough alone" and refuse the proffer of an extra gain undreamed of before last winter? It is for the farmers to decide, as to the benefits of reciprocity, whether or not an enlarged market, without any tariff obstacles will be a benefit. Let the farmer of to-day consult with some veteran farmer who remembers the results of the reciprocity treaty of 1854-66. He will tell him that the United States market then was a great benefit, and it will be the same to-day under the proposed reciprocity agreement. It is to be remembered that the present reciprocity agreement is the first measure of tariff relief in the interests of the farmers since Confederation. Will the farmers reject the advantages offered? They will do so if they do not support the candidates of the government that is offering the reciprocity agreement—a wider market—to the farmers of Canada.

THIS CITY TO HAVE AN UP-TO-DATE CAFE

An up-to-date cafe with an orchestra in attendance, will be an innovation that will invade Peterborough some time in the near future.

Mr. N. Dourus, of the Boston Cafe, have secured the premises formerly owned by the proprietors of China Hall and will take possession to-morrow. They will have the place entirely refitted to suit the requirements of the business.

The second floor will be converted into a banquet hall. Altogether about $5000 will be expended in alterations.

Mr. Dourus has contemplated moving to a larger and more up-to-date premises for some time, as the large and ever increasing trade has outgrown the confines of the present establishment.

JULY WEATHER NOTES

The chief feature of the weather in the month just passed was the extreme heat that prevailed on a number of days during the first week, and to a lesser extent during the second week also. The first day of July was quite warm, 91 in the shade being registered. Next day was warmer still, 93 degrees being the figure. The following day (the 3rd) the mercury went up to 97 degrees. The heat was extreme, and we deluded ourselves with the thought that the limit had been reached, and that it could not be worse. The next day (the 4th) we had the comparatively comfortable temperature of 90 degrees. On the 5th, however, the thermometer did a stunt it had been thought incapable of performing, at least around Peterborough. Shortly after noon on that day it went up to 100 degrees in the shade, and stay remained there for several hours. Without doubt this was the hottest day ever experienced around these parts.

Three days of cooler conditions followed, then on the 9th we had it 94; 10th, 92; and 11th, 88 degrees. From that date to the end of the month more moderate temperatures prevailed.

The lowest temperature was on the 27th, when the thermometer was down to 44.4 The two preceding nights, and the following night, had low temperatures. Light white frost was said to have been seen on several of these mornings.

There was rain on 11 days. The total amount was 4 inches and 62-100 of an inch. There was thunder on 8 days, and hail on one. The storm of the 11th was the most severe for some time. Two inches and 17-100 fell from 12.30 to 3.30 p.m.—W.P.

Cow Tests For June

Some interesting figures taken from the June records of some of the local cow-testing associations are submitted below by Mr A. L. Andress, Recorder at Indian River:

In looking over the June records, some remarkable differences in the yields of individual cows are shown.

In the Ennismore Association the best cow gave 1770 lbs. of milk and over 60 lbs. of fat; while the poorest cow gave 745 lbs. milk and about 26 lbs. fat, or less than half that produced by the best cow.

In the Trewern Association the best cow produced 1690 lbs. milk and over 56 lbs. of fat; while the lowest cow produced 570 lbs. milk and 16 lbs. fat.

At Shearer the best cow gave 1380 lbs. milk and 45½ lbs. fat; while the lowest cow gave 560 lbs. milk and 19 lbs. fat.

In the Warsaw Association the best cow gave 1140 lbs. milk and 52 lbs. fat; while the lowest cow gave 760 lbs. milk and 25 lbs. fat.

A herd of 8 cows in the Norwood Association has the high average of lbs. milk and 44 lbs. fat. A herd like this should be an inspiration to every farmer.

TWO DEATHS FROM SEPTIC POISONING

NAPANEE, ONT., AUGUST 1st.—Within 15 minutes of each other, Hazel and Maude, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Shannon, Newburgh road, near Napanee, died of septic poisoning. The girls were 15 and 11 years of age, respectively.

One was taken ill two weeks ago, and the other developed the same trouble shortly afterwards. They were treated for tonsilitis, but when Dr. J. C. Connell, specialist of Kingston, was called on consultation, he pronounced the trouble septic poisoning, due to a defective sewer, which was afterwards located. Nothing could be done to save their lives.

How Internal Enemies Of Canada Are Playing The Double Game

(The Globe.)

The greatest and most powerful enemies of Canadian nationality are within the gates. They are the men who at every time of popular excitement seek to set race against race and creed against creed. The most conspicuous object of their venomous pursuit is Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Of undiluted Norman-French blood, he is the first citizen in a country in which men of British birth are in the majority. A Catholic, he holds the reins of government in a land where Protestants are dominant. He presents a shining mark for the poisoned arrow of racial and religious antagonism.

During the next six weeks in every part of Canada in which there is a prospect of injuring the Liberal party by such tactics it will be whispered that Laurier is over-mindful of his own. His loyalty to the Empire will be jeered at. Demagogues like George Tate Blackstock will have the hardihood to tell the people that Laurier and Fielding are conspiring against Canadian nationality. The Toronto Telegram, with the monotonous iteration of a caged parrot, will scream "Continentalist! Continentalist!" Behind tiled doors the brethren will be urged to vote against a Catholic Premier. The Belleville Intelligencer will continue to cement the unholy alliance between Ontario Toryism and Quebec Nationalism by declaring that "the Nationalists are preferable to the Laurier Liberals."

Who are the Nationalists whose alliance is so keenly desired by the former Grand Sovereign of the Orange Order? (Sir Mackenzie Bowell). What are their ideals? They are the most anti-British, the most frankly ultramontane propagandists that French Canada has ever seen. There is no concealment about their methods. They hate Sir Wilfrid Laurier and seek to destroy him for exactly the opposite reason put forward by their allies in Ontario. In this Province Laurier is to be destroyed because he is not British enough, because he does not safeguard Protestant rights. The Nationalists wish to destroy him because they assert that he has betrayed his race and his religion at the behest of the Orangemen of Ontario.

This is not a fanciful sketch of the situation. At a meeting at Fraserville, reported in Le Devoir of July 24, Mr. Armand Lavergne, the young orator who wore a garb of soberness and impartiality when he addressed the students of the University of Toronto some months ago is reported as follows:

"I shall address myself to the Rouges (grits). I hope to be able to convert some one. As for those who are not willing to understand, the party of honest men has no use for them."

"Here some one in the crowd cried: 'Hurrah for Laurier!'

"Yes, hurrah for Laurier, my friend! I also cried, as you do, Hurrah for Laurier! when in 1896 I heard him proclaim at St. Roch in Quebec that the great principle of the Liberal party was respect for minorities, and that when he obtained power he would do justice to our brothers of Manitoba. Some months later he sacrificed the Catholics of Manitoba to the 'Orangeist' fanatics. Hurrah for Laurier!

"Hurrah for Laurier, my friend! While in 1896 Mr. Brodeur wrote in Le Soir denouncing the purchase of rifles by the Tupper Government, three years afterward in 1899 Laurier despatched 5,000 Canadians to Africa to fight a little people who had never done anything to us, and who battled for their faith, their language and their liberty."

There is in the speech much more to the same effect deliberately intended to rouse racial feeling and to picture Laurier as an enemy of his own people. The most serious feature of the situation is that because of the differences in language few Ontario people read Le Devoir or other organs of Nationalism, and few French-Canadians read such papers as The Toronto Telegram, The Mail and Empire, or The Belleville Intelligencer. Were it not for the fact that the men in Quebec who denounce Laurier for sending troops to South Africa and for the settlement of the Manitoba school question are fairly confident that their incendiary utterances will never be reported in the Tory Press of Ontario these would be an end of such disgraceful methods of campaigning.

The Liberal party would be justified, as a means of stopping the racial and religious enemies of Canada from injuring the country, in posting on every dead wall in Ontario the evidence furnished by speeches like that of Mr Lavergne, which was made in Mr. Bourassa's presence, that Laurier is held up to the hatred of his own people for keeping the balance justly between English-speaking Protestant and French-speaking Catholic.

D. L. MOODY ON THE HIGHER CRITICISM

Editor Examiner.

Sir,—The writer on one occasion heard the late D. L. Moody, that great and honoured preacher of the simple truth, give his hearers a piece of good advice. He said: "Some people belong to a church because their father and grandfather belonged to that church; he had no fault to find with them for that, but he said, if you have a preacher in your church who is tearing God's word to pieces and cutting out this book and that chapter, etc., and telling you they are not inspired and not true, you get out of that church at once no matter whether your father or grandfather or your great-grandfather belonged to it or not." Dr Carman says that when higher criticism smites a man it partakes of the nature of the rabies. The great danger is that the hearers will be smitten with this spiritual hydrophobia, for it is most contagious.

Moody knew the danger and sounded an alarm.

Yours,

John Carlisle.

Hail Caledonia!

Knox church is to be the venue of a big night among the "chiels" from the "Land of brown heath and shaggy wood;

Land of the mountain and the flood," on the evning of September 22. Rev. H. J. Keith, who is a great admirer of the "callants" from auld Scotia's shores, is a leading spirit in the movement.

The other evening arrangements were commenced, as far as to have committees set in motion, and among those who have charge of the main details are: Messrs. W. Young, Ed. Hardie, Alex. Hardie, Wm. Lorimer, R. Dickson, Jno. Anderson and others, along with the pastor.

The event will be purely Scottish—soda scones, pan-cakes, bannocks, short bread (a few samples also coming fro mthe auld land)—"parritch," it seems, will not be included on the menu.

The musical part of the programme will be the "auld hame songs," Scottish readings, and if time permits, Rev. H. J. Keith will deliver an oration on the Scottish reformer, John Knox.

A large gathering of the clans is expected, both in town and surrounding country, and 'twill be a red letter night for our city.

Golden Jubilee To-morrow

The city has probably never before been visited at one time by such a large number of Catholic clergymen and laity from other parts of the Dominion as it will be this evening and to-morrow. It is seldom indeed that an event of such a nature as a "golden jubilee" of a bishop is celebrated, and when it is considered that after a continued service of devotion to the people of this diocese of more than twenty years, following a span of nearly thirty years spent in the priesthood in Toronto diocese, his Lordship is still enjoying the best of health and strength, it is a matter in which he may be congratulated by the priests and laity of his extensive flock, as well as by the citizens of the city and province generally.

The programme for the day will begin by the singing of Pontificial High mass at the Cathedral, at the conclusion of which His Lordship Bishop Fallon of London, will preach the sermon, and addresses will be delivered by the priests and laity of the diocese. A banquet will be given to the clergy at 12.30 in St. Peter's Hall, and in the evening a reception will be held on the Cathedral lawn, to which all are invited.

STEAMER'S CREW GETS PURSE

Examiner Special:

KINGSTON, JULY 29.—The courage and promptness of the two cooks on the steamer Kingston, who on Wednesday rescued the five Kingstonians whose sailing boat capsized about a mile out in the harbour here, was well rewarded by the passengers and crew of the steamer.

When the men in the rescuing boat returned to the steamer with the young people, they were given a rousing cheer by the passengers. A collection was started and about $100 was collected. This was divided between the two men.

Further details of the accident show that the rescue was performed with great difficulties, and a great risk to the rescuers. The young people were in a drowning condition, and it is well known that a drowning man's hold is hard to break. One of the men secured a hold on his rescuer and would have pulled him out of the boat had it not been for the prompt action of the other. A doctor on board the steamer worked for about twenty minutes with one of the boys before he was resuscitated.

PEOPLE OF THE WEST FAVOUR RECIPROCITY

Mr. C. C. Boyce, a Prominent Farmer of Smith, Returns From a Two Months' Visit to West

CROPS ARE LOOKING FINE

Mr. C. C. Boyce of Smith, has returned after a two months' visit to the West. While in the West Mr. Boyce visited Alberta and Southern Saskatchewan, and in conversation with the Examiner to-day, says the crops are good and he believes they will come up to, if not excel, the high-water mark. Settlers are pouring in from all parts of the world, and the vast plains of the North West are rapidly being transformed into rolling wheat fields.

From all Mr. Boyce could learn, the whole country is in favour of reciprocity, and he had no doubt but what the people of the North West would give the measure a trial. Mr. Boyce expects to return to the West in the spring, when he will take up land and become a settler of Alberta.

The inquest into the death of the unknown man, who was found near Fraserville on Monday night, was held at the Town Hall near Springville last night, and the following verdict was given by the jury after about 20 minutes' deliberation: "We, your jurists, having viewed the remains of the unknown man found on lot 1, con. 8, of North Monaghan, and having heard the evidence in connection therewith, do agree that it is the remains of John Carl, the man who formerly lived on the 3rd concession of Cavan, in the County of Durham, and had gone into the unoccupied building and died from natural causes about the last of June."

The remains were buried near Fraserville.

Drowning Fatality At Port Hope

Examiner Special.

Wilfrid McMahon, the twelve-year-old son of Mr. John McMahon, Smith street, went down to a watery grave at noon yesterday in Lake Ontario. The little fellow, with a number other boys, was bathing, and it is thought that he was seized with cramps and went down. The alarm was at once given, but thirty-five minutes elapsed before the body was recovered. Drs. Whyte, Clemesha and McKinley were soon on the scene but all efforts at resuscitation failed.

Mr. John McMahon was out on the lake fixing his nets at the time and seeing the crowd gathered, at once hastened to shore and reached there just in time to see the body raised from the water.

Deceased was a bright young lad and the sincerest sympathy is extended to the father and family in their sudden and sad bereavement —Port Hope Guide.

Don't Wear Old Appearing Glasses

Why have Glasses that are awkward to wear and that give an unnecessary "old" appearance? Why duck and peer over your Reading Glasses to see objects at a distance? Why wear two pair of glasses, one for distance, the other for reading? Why wear conspicuous pasted wafers cemented to your distance lenses, when it is not necessary?

Wear Our Toric Kryptoks

Toric Kryptoks have the appearance of single lenses but give perfect distant and close work service. There is no marked "old appearing" dividing line to distract the vision and collect dirt; there is no plaster to blur or fall off—instead you have solid lenses which you can wear at all times for all purposes as naturally as you would use your eyes without glasses.

Each To Get $1,000

By the will of the late George F. Schneider, who died a short time ago, his entire property was bequeathed to his three children, with a request that they donate one thousand dollars to the Protestant Home and a similar amount to the Children's Aid Society. This last wish of the deceased is a striking tribute to his philanthropy, and it is needless, though pleasing, to state that in due time it will be faithfully carried out by the heirs to the estate.

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unparalleled."

THURSDAY, AUGUST 3, 1911

STANDING OF PARTIES.

The results of the general elections for the past twenty years, as affecting the standing of parties in Ontario, can thus be summarised:

	Libs..	Cons.
1891	44	48
1896	49	43
1900	37	55
1904	38	48
1908	26	60

A PIPE DREAM.

Some persons are described as more loyal than the King; and there are those who know more than those who know. Our evening contemporary has entered this class. Last night the Review announced that the "Premier is Coming," adding that "the Liberals of West Peterborough are trying to arrange a meeting here by Sir Wilfrid Laurier," and that it would likely be "at the opening of the campaign, on Saturday." This is all—to speak mildly—imagination, and the only true part is that there will be a meeting on Saturday to nominate a Liberal candidate. If our contemporary confined its writings to what it knows, or knows of, there might be less writing, but there would also be less of the policy of lying an election through which is so characteristic of the Conservative press, with a few honourable exceptions, in the present campaign. There is no attempt, on the part of the Liberals of West Peterborough, to bring Sir Wilfrid Laurier to Peterborough—that is, not that they know of. If he should come his arrival will not be first announced in an Opposition journal, nor be founded upon street gossip, or pure invention. Thus early in the campaign our contemporary has shown that its statements upon political matters are to be taken with a mighty pinch of salt—treated as pipe dreams.

LEAVE OUT THE CANADIAN CLUBS.

Mr. Sifton did an improper and impolitic thing when, in his message to the electors of Canada, he invited the Canadian Clubs to take part in the coming contest. Most of the members of these clubs do not take a hand in elections, and it would be a good thing if more of them did the same thing. But this is obviously not what Mr. Sifton means. He wants the Canadian Clubs to take part as such in the campaign, and he would like them to come out against reciprocity on patriotic grounds If this is not a fair interpretation of his discourse it is hard to say why he lugged in the Canadian clubs at all.

These clubs have become influential along patriotic lines, just because they are and have always been non-partisan. In every city or town, where there is a Canadian Club, it gathers into itself the brightest, most alert and most far-seeing minds of both political parties. They all know that they do not come together in their gatherings to talk party politics; they meet generally to hear some one on a subject in which he is an expert, and often a veteran. In this way they get, as individuals, new ideas, and are taken and kept out of ruts. This is a great work for any organization to do for its members, and the clubs do it well—far better than they could possibly carry elections.

Mr. Sifton seems to assume that to support reciprocity in this election is to be unpatriotic. It is a pure assumption for which there is not a particle of warrant. Tens of thousands of good Canadian citizens are working their hardest to secure the ratification of the reciprocity agreement in the full belief that this is just now the most patriotic work open to them to take part in. Many of them are just as capable of forming an intelligent opinion on such a subject as Mr. Sifton is, and when he asserts or implies that they are not merely wrong-headed, but wrong hearted, his attitude smacks very strongly of priggishness and charlatanism.

It would be just as well for the parties on both sides if the rasping and bitterness that are apt to characterize a more than usually keen discussion could be cut out of this one. Whatever else may be said about reciprocity no one can deny that it is a great issue. All feel it to be so, and therefore it is not necessary to be abusive in order to keep the interest from flagging. There is nothing in the case to be hysterical about. Reciprocity, if it is adopted, will be slow in showing results. Some of its best results will be neither ponderable nor measureable; it is a field of discussion, where statistics may be made to prove what the user desires to establish.

THE PRINCIPLE OF THE AGREEMENT.

Sir William Van Horne, once more prominently associated than he is now with the C.P.R., said he was "sick and ashamed" when he heard of the reciprocity agreement, which simply provides for larger trade with the United States. But the C.P.R. itself is too good a "business head" to be influenced by such clap-trap. It is officially announced that the C. P. R. is preparing to make big shipments of coal from its British Columbia mines to the United States, when the reciprocity agreement is ratified and the duty reduced. Will Sir William Van Horne resign from the board of directors, because his railway company proposed committing the crime of selling goods to the United States?

But the C.P.R. is influenced by business considerations, recognising that encouraged and less trammelled trade is its life, while Sir William is now more interested in the special "interests" that would make trade subservient to their monopolistic plans — nothing must be done or permitted that will interfere with the cent per cent. profits of the moneyed interests —which are assumed to be threatened by a reciprocity arrangement, which, in the main, only affects farm products.

It would be a crime to adjust the tariff so that it would benefit the farmers, and give them a larger and better market. Since 1878 the farmers have patiently contributed, by the way of customs duties, to the benefits of the manufacturing industries, and now it is treason, and disloyalty, destruction and disaster, to pass the first tariff measure ever proposed since Confederation, in the interests of the farming industry—a measure that does not consist in imposing taxes for other classes to pay—but in relief from taxation in the interests of enlarged and profitable trade.

Sir William Van Horne, capitalist and promoter, belongs to a class that has grown great and wealthy on money taken from the pockets of the farmers in the interests of the protected manufacturers. The farmers have not greatly complained of this, for they were helping put our infant industries on their feet. Now, after helping in this process for thirty-three years, the farmers are not to be blamed if they demand a little tariff reduction in their own interests.

But they are told by the monopolistic element of the assisted interests—in effect, if not in so many words—that in demanding a little share of the benefits of tariff adjustment; in demanding better opportunities of trade; in demanding a wider market for their farm products, they are traitors, and nation-wreckers, annexationists, separationists and all that is bad.

They are told—in effect, if not in so many words—that the place of the farmer is at the tail of the plough—that his proper and only duty is to pay without complaining, the taxes, levied for the benefit of the protected interests, and indidentally of capitalistic operators like Sir William Van Horne, who, with many others of his class, take the money, made in Canada, to foreign countries—like Cuba—to assist in their own further enrichment and in the development of the resources of strange lands.

These are the men that are moving heaven and earth to kill an agreement designed primarily in the interests of the farmer and hardly affecting the duties on any manufactured article.

They are moved solely by an exigeant self-interest, in disregard of the law of fair play and economics. Practical considerations contradict their theories. A business enterprise like the C.P.R., in its proposal to ship the coal from its British Columbia mines to the United States is acting on the principle that underlies the reciprocity agreement—that trade is a national necessity and benefit, and that unhampered trade promotes the application of this principle.

EDITORIAL NOTES

If one place more than another should be fire-proof, it is an asylum for the insane. A rich province like Ontario should take to heart the lesson of the Hamilton Asylum fire, with its death roll of eight victims.

The ghost stories of the Opposition press—the roorbacks—fall apart of their own rottenness. The Ottawa Journal disposes of Hon. Wm. Templeman by placing him on the bench. It happens that Mr. Templeman is not a lawyer, but a newspaper man, and is, therefore, as little adapted to occupy the bench as an honest man would be to occupy the editorial chair of some Opposition newspapers.

The Farm and Farming Interests Are The First Consideration

The amount of misinformation that is being spread abroad throughout the country in connection with the reciprocity discussion is amazing. The blind are leading the blind on a thousand highways. Take the case of the Guelph Herald, a conservative journal, which stated the other day that "the one article of farm produce of which there is more than the home market needs is wheat."

The Guelph Herald is a pretty decent paper. The man who wrote that statement probably believes it. He would not feel comfortable were he presenting to the readers of the Herald what he knew to be untrue. But it seems incredible that a man writing in Guelph, in the heart of a stock-raising and dairying region, with a famous Agricultural College library within reach, should know so little of the conditions of farming as to tell his readers that "the one article of farm produce of which there is more than the home market needs is wheat."

Were Canada's exports of farm products confined to wheat the grass would be growing in the streets of Guelph, and the editor of the Herald would be in full flight toward a land of greater opportunity. The very foundation-stone of Canada's prosperity is its export of farm produce. Great Britain has taken over a hundred and ten million dollars' worth of Canadian cheese in the past five years. Of animals and their produce, a classification which has nothing at all to do with wheat, the United States took almost forty million dollars' worth in the same period. Here are the chief items of imports and exports of farm produce in the year ending March 31, 1910, as taken from the Trade and Commerce report. The exports are in each case Canadian produce:

	Exports	Imports
Living animals	$12,107,971	$ 3,118,217
Grain of all sorts	56,750,571	17,698,534
Flour and other grain products	17,897,361	570,649
Fruits, green and ripe	4,722,157	5,738,789
Hay	1,805,849	138,423
Provisions, butter, cheese, lard, eggs and meat	30,806,680	4,406,363
Seeds	4,602,797	1,181,173
Vegetables	1,534,228	1,313,603

The Guelph Herald owes an apology to the readers it deceived with the statement that "the one article of farm produce of which there is more than the home market needs is wheat." There is practically not a thing animate or inanimate grown on Canadian soil except Indian corn and tobacco of which Canada does not export more than she imports.

Canada's exports of farm produce are increasing so fast that the need for larger markets is imperative. It is of the greatest significance that the exports of agricultural produce, which does not include animals and their products, are increasing far more rapidly than any other class of Canadian exports. In 1882 they ran up as high as thirty-nine millions, but by the time Mr. Foster had finished his work as Minister of Finance in 1896 they had sunk to fourteen millions. In the fiscal year ending March, 1910, they totalled over ninety millions. In the present year, that of 1911-12, they will total over a hundred millions. Is it any wonder that the Liberal campaign cry is "Laurier and Larger Markets"?

MR. BOURASSA'S POSITION.

Mr. Henri Bourassa is the leader of the "Nationalist' party in the Province of Quebec. He has in that capacity made some reputation along with a good deal of noise and vapour. He has signalized himself by a succession of bitter attacks on and exaggerated criticisms of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The Premier has generally, if not absolutely refrained from entering into controversy with him, and this seems to have had the effect of making Mr. Bourassa more unreasonably exasperated. "Intoxicated with the exuberance of his own verbosity" he has grown more and more violent as he feels buoyed up with the windiness of his own orations. According to the old saw ,"Empty vessels make most sound," and, if the converse of this is true, then Mr. Bourassa must rank high as "sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal."

It has always been somewhat of a problem to discover what Mr. Bourassa wants the public to understand by "Nationalism." If it means anything different from "Liberalism" and "Conservatism" he ought to be able to make the difference clear. This is not his way, however; he prefers to construct a party platform by taking some Liberal planks and some Conservative planks and adding to these a new plank or two that neither Liberals nor Conservatives would care to stand on. If the Nationalist platform is limited to these peculiar planks it is too narrow; if it is to include the borrowed ones as well it is too wide for practical purposes.

Take, for example, the navy. The regular Conservatives are opposed to starting with a purely Canadian navy under Canadian control. They want to give the British government the price of a Dreadnought and let it be built and controlled by the British Admiralty. If that is not enough then another Dreadnought or two should be given. Their standpoint is clear, and their policy is definite, and their propaganda is intelligible. In the opinion of the Liberals it is not the best policy for this Dominion, and this happens to be the opinion of the British Admiralty also, but it is the opinion of the Conservatives, and they appear to be proud of it. Certainly they are entitled to take their stand on it and do all they can to have it ultimately adopted.

The Liberals have a naval policy just as clear, just as definite, and just as intelligible and much more suitable to the circumstances. They want a Canadian navy made up of vessels built in Canada and owned by Canada. If a war should arise involving the use of the British fleet, the Dominion Parliament is to decide whether or not the Canadian fleet is to take part in the fighting. If the decision is that it should do so, then under the agreement adopted, by the late Imperial conference, it is to be put, for that war, under the absolute control of the British Admiralty. Meanwhile the construction of ships, the training of the crews, the style of armament, and the practice co-operation are to be under the advice of the British authorities, so that in the event of war there may be no bungling or glaring blunders. This, too, is a self-contained policy, and the Liberals are entitled to be proud of it and defend it against the Conservative attacks.

The Nationalists have no naval policy of a concrete and practical sort. They try to make capital against the Liberals, by all sorts of exaggerated appeals to anti-British sentiment, and by utterly misrepresenting and belittling the whole question of Imperial defence. On this question, and probably on all others, "Nationalism" is an appeal to French racial and religious prejudices. So far from being true or real Nationalism it is provincialism of the worst sort, utterly in conflict with any possible evolution of this Dominion, to say nothing of the solidarity of the Empire.

The Nationalists are obviously at one pole of the subject, and the Conservatives are at the other, while the Liberals, as the real Canadian Nationalists, are practical Imperialists, occupy the happy medium between them. Curious to say the Conservatives, in spite of this contradictory antagonism of views and outlook, are working hand in hand with the Nationalists to defeat the Laurier ministry. They will not succeed and the Conservatives are laying up for themselves a doom of condemnation that will yet sink them into a deeper depth of oblivion.

THE CANADIAN WEST SEEMS SOLID FOR RECIPROCITY

Mr. W. H. Collier is in the city, just returned from an extended holiday trip to the Canadian West—as far as British Columbia. He visited all the principal cities between Winnipeg and Vancouver, and was astounded at the activity of development to be seen everywhere. Things are seething, and in the process of subsidence to settled conditions, great opportunities for young men are presented on every hand, and thousands of young men are taking advantage of them.

Wherever Mr. Collier went he found Peterborough young men, and whenever he met them he found them invariably doing well, prosperous, thrifty and saturated with the energetic spirit of the West; some in business for themselves, and some working for others, with abundant reward.

Vancouver Mr. Collier found to be splendidly booming. The doleful picture of a slump there, pictured in the Toronto World, recently, had no original. That story was a very greatly exaggerated version of temporary unsatisfactory conditions, resulting from a short-lived labour strike. Building operations are astonishing. Already so far this season building permits to the amount of fifteen million dollars have been issued, and it is expected that the figures will reach twenty millions before the year closes. He says the new residence district, "Shaughnessy Heights," is the most admirable city residence district on the continent. It is rapidly filling up with handsome residences from $10,000 upthere being two now under construction, to cost $250,000 and $75,000 respectively. The generally employed material is a grey marble, occurring in great abundance in the vicinity. It can be quarried in immense blocks the figure of a lion 15 feet in length having been carved from monolith.

Edmonton Mr. Collier was best impressed with by reason of the lay-out of its streets and its municipal advancement—all its public services, street railway, electric light and water services are municipally owned.

Mr. Collier reports the crop outlook splendid. He drove from 20 to 30 miles into the country from city centres, both in Alberta and Saskatchewan, and did not see a poor crop of any kind of grain. The farmers are all well pleased with the outlook, and they say that, barring frost this month the west will reap a record crop, both in yield per acre and in aggregate.

Mr. Collier found reciprocity in high favour in the west. He met and conversed with hundreds of both political parties—in fine, he found, as a rule, only one party, the party of reciprocity. He says from what he heard, all along the trail, from east to west, that if the people vote as they talk, it looks as if there will hardly be elected three men opposed to reciprocity between Winnipeg and Vancouver. Judged by expressed opinions, the result of the coming election will be a practically solid contingent of reciprocity representatives from the Canadian west.

STRICKEN AREA RECOVERS.

J. L. Englehart Says Relief Committee Has Worked Nobly.

Toronto, Aug. 3.—After a week's tour of inspection of the burned districts in Northern Ontario, Chairman J. L. Englehart of the T. & N.O. Commission returned to the city yesterday. With regard to the distribution of supplies to the needy, Mr. Englehart said that he found the relief committees to have done their duties to the fullest extent in providing food and shelter for those in want. People who were not yet able to obtain the necessities of life of their own accord, were still being attended to. There are plenty of funds on hand.

Chairman Englehart's trip has been instrumental in clearing up the freight congestion on the branch lines of the T. & N.O., about which there were several complaints recently. Owing to the limited amount of siding room at Porcupine there was considerable trouble in getting the consignments of freight, etc., to their destination, but additional switches were installed as rapidly as could be done, and there is now lots of accommodation.

Mr. Englehart is more optimistic than ever regarding the future of Northern Ontario. "We never had a pleasanter trip to the north country," he said yesterday.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

Do you ever listen to your own voice?

If you don't, please let me suggest it as a valuable little experiment to make occasionally.

What would we think of a girl—or a man either, for that matter—who never looked in the glass? But how many people never in all the time of their lives hold up the mirror of self-inspection to their voices!

The girl who spends an hour or two daily before her mirror anointing her face with lotions and creams and powders and solicitously squint- think of giving his angle and that, probably doesn't attempting to ten minutes a year to inspecting and personality, her improve that other great tool of her ing at it from tented O'Henry has a witty little story about two men, one of whom was, to use his own expression, "a gargoyle with a silver tongue," and the other—to quote again—"a ringer for Hermes, but with a voice that sounded like a leak dripping in a tin dishpan at the head of the bed when you want to go to sleep." Those two men went after the same woman. The "gargoyle with the silver voice" got her.

Like many of O'Henry's tales, this one has a kernel of suggestion as well as a bushel of laughter.

Of cotrse we can't all have silver tongues, but we can all have pleasant and well modulated voices. And the first step to this end is to listen to them. I don't mean to sit down and talk so as to hear our own voiced. We wouldn't really get any idea of the mthat way. The way to hear one's voice as it naturally is, is to suddenly listen to it in the midst of a conversation and compare it with other people's.

Do we speak too loud?

Do we talk always in one or two monotonous keys and thus lose the music of voice change?

Do we talk too rapidly?

Do we pitch our voices from our heads or throats instead of from the diaphragm, as we really should?

These are some questions for us to ask ourselves in front of the mirror of voice inspection.

And, I trust, to answer by an effort at improvement.

"ADVENTURE"

By JACK LONDON

Then came the long expected nor'-wester. For eight days it raged, lulling at times to short durations of calm, then shifting a point or two and raging with renewed violence. Sheldon kept a precautionary eye on the buildings, while the Balesuns, in floor, so savagely attacked the high bank Joan had warned him about, that he told off all the gangs to battle with the river.

It was in the good weather that followed that he left the blacks at work, one morning, and with a shotgun across his pommel rode off after pigeons. Two hours later, one of the house-boys, breathless and scratched, ran him down with the news that the Martha, the Flibberty-Gibbet and the Emily were heading in for the anchorage.

Coming into the compound from the rear, Sheldon could see nothing until he rode around the corner of the bungalow. Then he saw everything at once—first, a glimpse at the sea, where the Martha floated huge alongside the cutter and the ketch which had rescued her; and next, the ground in front of the veranda steps, where a great crowd of fresh-caught cannibals stood at attention. From the fact that each was attired in a new, snow-white lava-lava, Sheldon knew that they were recruits. Part way up the steps, one of them was just backing down into the crowd, while another, called out by name, was coming up. It was Joan's voice that had called him, and Sheldon reined in his horse and watched. She sat at the head of the steps, behind a table, between Munster and his white mate, the three of them checking long lists. Joan asking the questions and writing the answers in the big, red-covered, Berande labour journal.

"What name?" she demanded of the black man on the steps.

"Tagari," came the answer, accompanied by a grin and a rolling of curious eyes; for it was the first white man's house the black had ever seen.

"What place b'long you?"

"Bangoora."

No one had noticed Sheldon, and he continued to sit his horse and watch. There was a discrepancy between the answer and the record in the recruiting books, and a consequent discussion, until Munster solved the difficulty.

"Bangoora?" he said. "That's the little beach at the head of the bay out of Latta. He's down as a Latta man—see, there it is, 'Tagari, Latta.'"

"What place you go you finish along white marster?" Joan asked.

"Bangoora," the man replied, and Joan wrote it down.

"Ogu!" Joan called.

The black stepped down, and another mounted to take his place. But Tagari, just before he reached the bottom step, caught sight of Sheldon. It was the first horse the fellow had ever seen, and he let out a frightened screech and dashed madly up the steps. At the same moment the great mass of blacks surged away panic-stricken from Sheldon's vicinity. The grinning house-boys shouted encouragement and explanation, and the stampede was checked, the new-caught head-hunters huddling closely together and staring dubiously at the fearful monster.

"Hello!" Joan called out. "What do you mean by frightening all my boys? Come on up."

"What do you think of them?" she asked, when they had shaken hands. "And what do you think of her?"—with a wave of the hand toward the Martha. "I thought you'd deserted the plantation and that I might as well go ahead and get the men into barracks. Aren't they beauties? Do you see that one with the split nose? He's the only man who doesn't hail from the Poonga-Poonga coast; and they said the Poonga-Poonga natives wouldn't recruit. Just look at them and congratulate me. There are no kiddies and half-grown youths among them. They're men, every last one of them. I have such a long story I don't know where to begin, and I won't begin anyway till we're through with this and until you have told me that you are not angry with me.

"Ogu—what place b'long you?" she went on with her catechism.

But Ogu was a bushman, lacking knowledge of the almost universal beche-de-mer English, and half a dozen of his fellows wrangled to explain.

"There are only two or three more," Joan said to Sheldon, "and then we're done. But you haven't told me that you are not angry."

Sheldon looked into her clear eyes as she favoured him with a direct, untroubled gaze that threatened, he knew from experience, to turn teasingly defiant on an instant's notice. And as he looked at her, it came to him that he had never half anticipated the gladness her return would bring to him.

"I was angry," he said deliberately, "I am still angry, very angry—" he noted the glint of defiance in her eyes and thrilled—"but I forgave, and I now forgive all over again. Though I still insist—"

"That I should have a guardian," she interrupted. "But that day will never come. Thank goodness, I'm of legal age and able to transact business in my own right. And speaking of business, how do you like my forceful American methods?"

"Mr. Raff, from what I hear, doesn't take kindly to them," he temporized, "and you've certainly set the dry bones rattling for many a day. But what I want to know is, if other American women are as successful in business ventures?"

"Luck, 'most all luck," she disclaimed modestly, though her eyes lighted with sudden pleasure; and he knew her boy's vanity had been touched by his trifle of tempered praise.

"Luck be blowed!" broke out the long mate, Sparrowhawk, his face shining with admiration. "It was hard work, that's what it was. We earned our pay. She worked us till we dropped. And we were down with fever half the time. So was she, for that matter, only she wouldn't stay down, and she wouldn't let us stay down. My word, she's a slave-driver—'Just one more heave, Mr. Sparrowhawk, and then you can go to bed for a week,'—she to me, and me staggerin' 'round like a dead man, with bilious-green lights flashing inside my head, an' my head just bustin'. I was all in, but I gave that heave right oh—and then it was, 'Another heave now, Mr. Sparrowhawk, just another heave.' An' the Lord lummy, the way she made love to old Kina-Kina!"

He shook his head reproachfully, while the laughter died down in his throat to long-drawn chuckles.

"He was older than Telepasse and dirtier," she assured Sheldon, "and I am sure much wickeder. But this isn't work. Let us get through with these lists."

She turned to the waiting black on the steps:

"Ogu, you finish along big marster belong white man, you go Not-Not.—Here you, Tangari, you speak 'm along that fella Ogu. He finish he walk about Not-Not. Have you got that, Mr. Munster?"

"But you've broken the recruiting laws," Sheldon said, when the new recruits had marched away to the barracks. "The licenses for the Flibberty and the Emily don't allow for one hundred and fifty. What did Burnett say?"

"He passed them all of them," she answered. "Captain Munster will tell you what he said—something about being blowed, or words to that effect. Now I must run and wash up. Did the Sydney orders arrive?"

"Yours are in your quarters," Sheldon said. "Hurry, for breakfast is waiting. Let me have your hat and belt. Do, please, allow me. There's only one hook for them, and I know where it is."

She gave him a quick scrutiny that was at once [illegible] replied with relief and [illegible] the heavy belt and passed it to him.

"I don't see why I ever went to see another revolver," she complained. "That one has worn a hole in me, I'm sure. I never dreamed I could get so weary of one."

Sheldon watched her to the foot of the steps, where she turned and called back:

"My! I can't tell you how good it is to be home again."

And as his gaze continued to follow her across the compound to the tiny grass house, the realisation came to him crushingly that Berande and that little grass house was the only "home."

"And Burnett said, 'Well, I'll be damned—I beg your pardon, Miss Lackland, but you have wantonly broken the recruiting laws and you know it.'" Captain Munster narrated, as they sat over their whiskey, waiting for Joan to come back. "And says she to him, 'Mr. Burnett, can you show me any law against taking the passengers off a vessel that's on a reef?' 'That is not the point,' says he. 'It's the very, precise, particular point,' says she; 'and you bear it in mind and go ahead and pass my recruits. You can report me to the Lord High Commissioner if you want, but I have three vessels here waiting on your convenience, and if you delay them much longer there'll be another report go in to the Lord High Commissioner.'

"'I'll hold you responsible, Captain Munster,' says he to me, mad enough to eat scrap-iron. 'No, you won't,' says she: 'I'm the charterer of the Emily, and Captain Munster has acted under my orders.'

"What could Burnett do? He passed the whole hundred and fifty, though the Emily was only licensed for forty, and the Flibberty-Gibbet for thirty-five."

"But I don't understand," Sheldon said.

"This is the way she worked it. When the Martha was floated, we had to beach her right away at the head of the bay, and whilst repairs were going on, a new rudder being made, sails bent, gear recovered from the niggers, and so forth, Miss Lackland borrows Sparrowhawk to run the Flibberty along with Curtis, lends me Brahma to take Sparrowhawk's place, and starts both craft off recruiting. My word, the niggers came easy. It was virgin ground. Since the Scottish Chiefs, no recruiter had ever even tried to work the coast; and we'd already put the fear of God into the niggers' hearts till the whole coast was quiet as lambs. When we filled up, we came back to see how the Martha was progressing."

"And thinking we was going home with our recruits," Sparrowhawk slipped in. "Lord lumme, that Miss Lackland ain't never satisfied. 'I'll take 'em on the Martha,' says she, 'and you can go back and fill up again.'"

If There Is A Weak Spot

In Your System or a Faltering Organ it Will be Worse at This Time of Year

Vigor and Energy Run Low in Spring Unless You Use

DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD

It may be the stomach, the heart, the lungs, the filtering or excretory organs, but if there is a weak point it is likely to show up at this time of year.

The blood is thin and watery. It fails to supply proper nourishment. The all-essential nerve force is lacking, and you feel the effects first in your weakest organ.

Your trouble may take the form of indigestion, you may have neuralgia or twinges of sciatic rheumatism. The cause is the same—weak blood.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food will help you as nothing else can, because it supplies in condensed and easily assimilated form the elements which are necessary for the strengthening and invigorating of the various organs of the body.

Every dose of this great restorative organ goes to form new, red corpuscles in the blood—to make the blood rich and red. The faltering organs resume their functions, appetite improves, digestion becomes good, and gradually new energy and vigour find their way to every nook and corner of the body. To keep strong and well this spring use Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50 at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

STATUE OF CAPT. COOK IS PLANNED

Capt. James Cook, to whom Great Britain owes Australia and New Zealand, and who was one of the world's greatest navigators, is at last to have a fitting memorial of his services to England and the world. This memorial is to take the form of a statue designed by Sir Thomas Brock, the sculptor, who did the Victoria Memorial, and will have a place in London near the Admiralty Arch in the Mall.

Capt. Cook was really the first navigator of the Pacific Ocean. Others had discovered it centuries before, but he was the first to put those discoveries to practical use, and his explorations served as a basis for the first accurate maps of that great ocean. He found that there was no vast continent stretching from near the shores of Asia to the Antarctic Pole, as Europe had always thought. He was the first to sail around New Zealand, and he gave New South Wales its name.

Cook was one of the great seamen whose career began before the mast. He was the son of an agricultural labourer, and spent some of his earliest years crow-scaring on a Yorkshire farm. He picked up some rag of an education at the village school of Marton, but more than a rag it could not have been, for at the age of twelve he was bound apprentice to a shop-keeper at Staithes, a picturesque little fisherman's hamlet near Whitby. Fortunately for him, and for England, there was a quarrel with the shop-keeper, his indentures were cancelled, and he began a new apprenticeship to a firm of Whitby shipowners. Just as Francis Drake learned his trade aboard a coaster in the narrow seas, so James Cook's seamanship came from beating about hte North Sea and the Baltic. At the beginning of the war with France Cook, who was twenty-seven, had risen to be mate of his craft. He volunteered for the navy, and was entered as able seaman on a sixty-gun ship.

Later, as master of the Mercury, Cook sailed on the expedition of Wolfe and Saunders, which conquered Quebec and he was one of those who surveyed the unknown channel of the St. Lawrence, and piloted the fleet, with its transports.

A little later, he was appointed "marine surveyor of the coast of Newfoundland and Labrador." The excellence of his work won him a lieutenant's commission and the command of the Endeavour, which was sent out to the Pacific to observe the transit of Venus. Three years after the Endeavour had sailed from Plymouth, she anchored in the Downs, after sailing around New Zealand, charting the eastern coast of Australia, and naming New South Wales.

But Cook's work was not yet done. After a year at home, his flag was hoisted again on the Resolution, and he was off to seek for a passage round the north of America, from Pacific to Atlantic—that "northwest passage," for which so many fine seamen toiled and died. He went eastward again by the Cape and Tasmania and New Zealand. He meant to spend the winter surveying the Sandwich Islands. While the Resolution was lying off Hawaii, Cook was stabbed to death by some natives in revenge for the flogging of a thief

WHOOPING COUGH

Mrs. Charles Lovell, Agassiz, B.C. writes: "Seven of our nine children had whooping cough the same winter and we attribute their cure to Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. We always have it in the house, and recommend it as the king of all medicines. I was for merly completely cured of protruding piles by using Dr. Chase's Ointment."

Raid On Standard Oil

Examiner Special:

Canadian Press Despatch

Cleveland, O., Aug. 3.—As a result of the raid by city officials last night on the artificial gas plant of the East Ohio Gas Co., a Standard Oil subsidiary which supplies the city with artificial and natural gas, they laid part of their alleged evidence before County Prosecutor Cline to-day with a view to possible Grand Jury investigation. The raiders, who were aided by city police, obtained samples of a product they claim the company had been mixing with so-called artificial gas, and which they assert is natural gas. These samples will be analyzed at once. The public pays 80 cents a thousand feet for artificial gas and 30 cents for natural.

Band Concert Was A Success

The Salvation Army Band gave a concert in Victoria Park on Tuesday evening, in its usual popular manner. A large crowd attended, and the ideal evening added much to the success of the occasion. The band played some of its most popular pieces, and each one was greeted with loud applause.

Some of the selections called for considerable executive ability and skill, a characteristic which is not by any means lacking in the make-up of the Salvation Army Band (Bandmaster W. H. Peryer):

March, "Cole's Prize March"...Band
Selection, "The Monk"...Band
Introducing the famous old hymn, "Rock of Ages."
Selection, "Suggestions of the Sea."...Band

WORK ON GRANDSTAND IS BEING RUSHED TO COMPLETION

The Executive of the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition met last evening and a number of important questions were dealt with.

The erection of the new grand stand, which is a most substantial one, is progressing favourably, and will be completed in ample time for the opening of the exhibition. It is arranged to hold two night shows this year, on Thursday and Friday evening of the Fair. This year's attractions will be of an exceptionally high class quality.

If weather conditions prove favourable the Peterborough Fair this year will be visited by a bigger crowd than has ever been here for an annual exhibition. Indications point to one of the best and largest poultry exhibits ever seen here, and the entry list will be heavy. This is one of the great features of the fair. An innovation that will be adopted here this year will be the presenting of badges to poultry winners, in addition to the red, white and blue tickets.

Former Resident Of Peterborough Pays A Visit To The Electric City

Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Little of Saskatoon are in Peterborough on a short visit. Mr. Little, who left here two years ago, is very optimistic regarding the prospects for Saskatoon and Western Canada in general.

The crops will be enormous providing nothing comes in the meantime to destroy them. He expects that the census returns will show a population of 30,000 people for Saskatoon.

Mr. Little notices many improvements in Peterborough since he left and still likes the old town, but has become a thorough Westerner.

After a short visit here and up the lakes, Mr. and Mrs. Little will visit his brother in New York for a few days.

MR. HAULTAIN'S POSITION ON RECIPROCITY ISSUE

Still Maintains That It Would be of Benefit to Western Canada---Significant Incident at a Conservative Convention.

The Winnipeg Tribune editorially says:

"When the Conservative convention was held in Saskatchewan a few days ago it was noted that the name of the leader of the party in that Province did not appear in the list of office-bearers. There were those who intimated that Mr. Haultain had been turned down. It now transpires that Mr. Haultain declined the office of honorary vice-president of the Conservative Association of Saskatchewan because the convention passed resolutions endorsing the Borden platform in regard to reciprocity. Mr. Haultain took the stand that reciprocity would benefit Western Canada, and was willing to sink all party prejudices if in any way he could with his party strength add some encouragement to the agreement. Undoubtedly Mr. Haultain's position is endorsed by thousands of Conservatives who are not of the dyed-in-the wool variety. The men in both parties worthy of attention are those who have minds of their own. Mr. Haultain refuses to be made the mere catspaw of any Dominion leader. He has lived and worked too long in the independent school to sacrifice his principles at the bidding of Mr. Borden or any other leader."

DELIGHTFUL TIME SPENT BY VISITING CLERGY

Banqueted at St. Peter's at Noon---Sightseeing and Autoing in the Afternoon---Reception on Cathedral Lawn Brought Brilliant Function to a Close.

At the conclusion of the mass and reading of addresses yesterday morning, the priests and bishops were banqueted in the spacious Assembly Hall of St. Peter's school.

In the afternoon nearly all the private autos in town were placed at the disposal of the distinguished visitors and the remainder of the day was spent in sight-seeing. The committee who were empowered to make arrangements for the entertainment of the guests of his Lordship are loud in their praises of the good will shown by the residents of this city who spared no pains in the effort to make the day a successful one.

In the evening a reception was held by His Lordship on the lawn of the Cathedral, when many of those, who hitherto had not been fortunate enough to meet the Bishop, found a favourable opportunity on that occasion.

The grounds, containing such a large assembly, presented a lively spectacle. Myriads of coloured lights dotted the area, and the flags and bunting added picturesqueness to the scene.

The Band of the 57th played with its usual taste and precision. Below is a programme of the items:

March—"Our Director."
Grand Selection—Reminiscences of Ireland.
Highland Patrol—"Wee McGregor."
Selection—Harry Lauder's Songs.
Fantasia — Folk Songs of Russia With Tubular Chimes.
Indian Intermezzo—Bally Flower.
Southern Sketch—Down South.
March—Dublin Daisies.

The reception terminated by the playing of the national anthem at 10 o'clock.

THE GOLDEN JUBILEE

In addition to the beautiful tribute paid His Lordship Bishop O'Connor by the Rev. D. A. Casey in last evening's issue, the following poems, which we were forced to omit yesterday through lack of space, we take pleasure in publishing to-day:

THE PRIEST

Out of the Mystic Silence
He heard the whispered "Come."
But siren voices called him;
Pleadings of friends and home;
Life with its gaudy trappings,
Glamour of worldly lure—
Bright to the eyes first seeming—
Or else to serve the poor?

But to the sweet temptation
He steeled his pure young heart,
For him nor home nor kindred;
His was a life apart,
His on the lonely hilltops
With Christ, the Lord, to stand,
Leading by his example
Up to the Better Land.

What of the years of waiting?
How did he work and pray?
Fearing, yet how desiring,
The ordination day.
"Thou art a priest forever"
Thrills through his inmost soul,
Treading with holy fervour
Way to the final goal.

Perfect the preparation
Of him who trembling stands,
Robed in the sacred vestments,
Touching with holy hands
Chalice of man's atonement,
Fruit of the Pierced Side;
Signed with the blest anointing,
Priest of the Crucified.

There with the August sunshine
Tinting his robes of gold
Standeth the new-made pastor,
Shepherd within the fold.
He is a priest forever,
One of the chosen few.
Kneeling there for his blessing—
A mother's dream came true.

REV. D. A. CASEY.

THE PRIEST'S MOTHER

When the day was dead,
By her baby's bed
A mother kneels to pray.
"By the blood You shed
For men's souls," she said,
"Jesus, will you not say
If this child of mine
May be priest of Thine,
If such a grace might be?
'Tis for this I pine.
Oh! Vouchsafe a sign;
Is this his destiny?"

From above the bed
The thorn-crowned Head
Looked on her little child,
And as thus she prayed
When the day was dead
The sleeper softly smiled,
And a baby hand—
Does he understand
The watcher's sweet design—
What a mother planned
In her fervour grand?—
Doth trace the Saving Sign.

And a vision bright
Of an altar white
The silent chamber fills,
And this young levite
Who, the Sacret Rite
With holy awe fulfills.
"Ah! it cannot be
That my babe I see;"
The Sin-crowned sweetly smiled.
"By My own decree.
From eternity,
I called your little child."

And the mother wept
As her darling slept.
Sweet tears of holy joy,
And the secret kept
From all else wept,
God and the sleeping boy.

FIVE TRAINLOADS HARVESTERS LEFT FOR THE WEST TO-DAY

Toronto, Aug. 3.—The annual cry from the farmers of the Western province for farm hands to harvest the crops, which are ripening, will be answered to-morrow morning, when the first homeseekers and farm hands excursion pulls out of the Union Station bound for the West. The Canadian Pacific figures that over 4,000 people will leave Toronto on this excursion, and everything is ready now to handle the crowds.

It is figured that in all five special trains will be necessary. Each train will be made up of twenty coaches, including baggage cars. The heaviest mogul freight engines in the service will be used to haul the load of human freight. The first train will leave about 9.30, and the others will be sent as the homeseekers gather.

Although the police department of the C.P.R. are not anticipating any trouble with the excursionists, Chief Constable Sam Wright is putting two uniformed officers on each train. Two car cleaners will be detailed to look after each train, and keep the coaches in order. The car cleaners will be in charge of the constables, and will be asked to assist if any trouble occurs. These four men, along with the main crew, the C.P.R. think, can keep the crowds well in hand.

Two specials from Windsor and St. Thomas will come down to West Toronto and will start out from that point.

8 BOXES CURED PSORIASIS

"Mrs. Nettie Massey, Consecon, Ont., writes: "Three doctors described my trouble as psoriasis, and one said I could never be cured. The disease spread all over me, even on my face and head, and the itching and burning was hard to bear. I used eight boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment, and am entirely cured—not a sore to be seen. I can hardly praise this Ointment enough."

The King's Scottish Body Guard

Among the interesting customs observed in Edinburgh during the King's recent visit to the Scottish capital must be classed the service performed by the Royal Company of Archers—the Sovereign's Bodyguard for Scotland—of presenting three barbed arrows to King George in accordance with the terms of the charter granted to the Royal Company in 1703. On three occasions Queen Victoria was presented with these arrows, and once George IV was the recipient, in 1822. In that year the Royal Archers wore the tartan costume, trimmed with green silk fringe, their bonnets being decorated with green and white ribbons and bearing the St. Andrew's cross in front. The dress of the officers was laid over with rich silver lace. A short time after King George's visit their dress was replaced by the tunics of Lincoln green. It is not generally known that when the Archers meet at mess the first toast is not 'The King,' but 'The Mark,' which is drunk sitting.

The ancient body of Archers is the oldest company of bowmen in the world, and almost every notable Scottish family has been at some time or other represented in its ranks. It was instituted by the Marquis of Athole as the King's Bodyguard for Scotland in 1676, but there are traces of the company's existence earlier still. But about the commencement of the eighteenth century its ancient records perished in a fire, and a charter was given it by Queen Anne. With this the company appears to have entered on a new lease of life. In 1709 the magistrates of Edinburgh recognized them by presenting a silver arrow to be shot for annually. Nine years later the company got a grant of a piece of ground west of the Parliament House on which to erect butts. In 1714 the company took precaution lest bowmarking should become a lost art. These were certainly not premature, as there was only one bowmaker then in Scotland, while the great factory for arrows was at Ghent. An agreement was entered into with one Rob. Monro that the company should advance him twenty-four pound Scots to buy wood for the making of arrows, which he was to sell to the company at the rate of one shilling each. From that time onward the company have had their bows and arrows made by their own officer.

Disloyalty in the King's Bodyguard for Scotland has not been unknown in the long history of the corps. During the Revolution the Bodyguard was composed mostly of upholders of the House of Stuart, and the corps for a time was suspended from holding meetings. Again in 1745, some of the leading members went "out" with Prince Charlie, but on this occasion the defection was not so widespread as to bring down the Royal displeasure on the company. In the old days parades were frequently held, and the whole population of Edinburgh and Leith turned out to see the archers' procession to Leith links, where the shooting butts were set out, and feasting and music concluded the day's enjoyment. It says much for the toughness of the Scottish peerage that the Bodyguard has had only thirteen captains since 1676. With a break of twenty-six years, the command of the corps has been held since 1778 by the House of Buccleuch. The picturesque dress of the Archers' Company has been widely admired. It must not however, be supposed that it has always been the garb worn. Their uniform has been modified again and again. At the outset it consisted of a white vest, green breeches, and bonnet. This gave place, in 1713, to a coat of Stuart tartan lined with fine white shalloon, white stockings, a white "lining" bow-case, a green worsted bob, a blue bonnet with a St. Andrew and a cockade of white and green ribbons. The uniform was again altered in 1720, 1822 and 1829, the dress of the latter year forming the basis of the present, only being much simpler. In 1863 the latest alteration was made the Highland bonnet being adopted.

At least two great names in literature have been associated with the company—Allan Ramsay and Sir Walter Scott. The former was admitted an honorary member in 1724, and appointed bard of the company. Worthy Allan composed a short poem of thanks for his admission, and under his signature in the original roll of members appear the following lines, written by himself:

"Apollo! patron of the Lyre,
And of the valiant Archers' bow
Me with such sentiments inspire
As may appear from thee to flow
When by thy special will and dread command
I sing the merits of the Royal Band!"

Scot was admitted a member in 1822 and was elected a member of Council four years later. Although he did not attend the shooting competitions, Sir Walter took a lively interest in the affairs of the company, and bore a share in devising a new uniform.

LINES TAE THE SCOTS COMMITTEE O' KNOX KIRK

The following lines were composed by "A Scots Chiel," who hails from Loch Lomondside, on reading of the coming Scottish re-union in Knox Church:

The time hung wearie on ma haun
The ither nicht when toil wis ower;
Wi' tired limbs I flung me doon
Tae wile awa' the wearie oors.
Ma thochts gaed back tae happier days
And playmates, when we plunked the schule
Tae guddle trout, tae gether slaes,
Or ramble ower the heath-clad hills.
Wi' flickerin' hert, wi' nerves unstrung,
Ma een wi' gledness fell apon
Those words, sae dear tae Scottish tongue—
Hail, Caledonia!

And underneath that glorious name
Were ithers, tellin' o' a feedin';
That set ma auld Scotch hert aflame,
"Guid sakes," quo' I, "jist whit I'm needin'."
Nae need for book tae dicht it doon—
The twenty-second o' September;
I am still aboot yer spoon,
Expect me there, a loyal member.
A hunner thoosan' times an' mair,
Wi' joyfu' hert I'd thank ye for it,
Gad ye put on yer bill o' fare—
Auld Scotland's porridge!

Wi' scones an' cakes an' bannocks gran',
Wi' sangs an' Scottish clatterin',
An' shortbread frae oor native lan'—
Ma teeth's already watterin'.
There's twa-three things that should be there,
That ye've omitted in the feedin';
Gad ye put on yer bill o' fare
A Scottish haggis, rich an' reekin';
Plain truth tae tell, nae auld wife fable,
Never since Scots were born
Has shortbread decked a Scottish table
Without John Barleycorn!

TO COMMENCE WORK ON HUDSON BAY RAILWAY

OTTAWA, AUG. 1.—Active progress on the construction of the Hudson Bay Railway will be made immediately, thus effectively answering one of Mr. Borden's chief complaints in the West in regard to alleged delay on the part of the Government.

Following the Government decision to construct the railway itself, surveys were completed and tenders asked last June for the construction of the first 200 miles, extending from Pas Mission, Keewatin territory, to Thicket Portage, and running in a northeasterly direction through the primitive country north of the Saskatchewan River.

Two Satisfactory Tenders.

Tenders were opened this afternoon In all eight were received, but the choice, it is understood, narrowed down to two, those submitted by Mr. J. D. McArthur and by Mr. M. J. O'Brien. Both of these tenders, it is said, were of a very satisfactory character and within the estimates secured by the Railway Department. The figures, however, will yet have to be gone over in detail before any official announcement of the awarding of the contract will be made.

To Start Work Shortly.

It is the intention of the Government to start the work of construction at the earliest possible time, and it is regarded as likely that the successful contractor will be at work before September 1. Construction of the railway will commence from the north end of the Government bridge over the Saskatchewan at The Pas. If, as is probable, Port Nelson is selected as the terminal port, the railway will be approximately 500 miles in length, and the Government anticipates putting down a considerable portion of the first 200 miles of roadbed, provided for by the present contract, before the advent of winter.—Globe.

THE WORK CURE

A treatment based on the curative effect of graduated labour is being tried out experimentally at the tuberculosis sanitorium in England with excellent results. It is known as "the work cure" and progress being made under this method is attracting much attention and claiming the undivided interest of all who are enlisted in the ranks battling to exterminate the great white plague. The director of the institution declares that patients undergoing the open-air treatment were found to make better progress when having a certain amount of work to do each day than when they were allowed to lead aimless lives. Practical use has been made of this observation and a systematic table of work suitable for those in different stages of the disease is the result.

This work is divided into six grades, varying from the slightest labour given to those who are unfitted for active exercise — sewing, making mats, etc., to the really heavy work of trenching, mixing concrete and felling trees. Short walks are considered to be light labour for those who can get about, and are followed as progress made by such easy garden employment as picking up wood, carrying baskets of mould and watering plants.

From these occupations the patients are gradually led on to the heavier tasks of using the small shovel, grass shears or a light hoe, eventually progressing to the still more strenuous work of digging broken ground and mowing lawns. When, after the most careful regulation of his work, a patient attains the ambitious post of a chopper of trees, the completion of his "cure" is well within sight.

Those who have successfully passed through the lighter grades of work carry out the latter stages of hard physical labour without shirking and with the greatest benefit to their health. The women, too, do all manner of outdoor work, but their tasks and tools are smaller than those of the men. As a rule, the patients work about four and one-half hours a day, and before they are considered fit to be discharged they are put to work at their customary trade or occupation for six hours a day for three weeks.

At the institution where this experiment has been conducted the net results are as follows: Out of 419 consumptive patients in the last year 192 have shown complete arrest of the disease and 195 have presented very considerable improvement. Thus 80 per cent. have derived great benefit from the treatment and 45 per cent. have apparently been cured. Sixty-eight patients, advanced in the disease, showed only moderate improvement.

Generally speaking, the cases under treatment at this sanitorium are selected, and those who are about to enter the final stages or who are in a feverish, exhausted condition, are excluded from the application of the outdoor system.

It is believed that this system, if undertaken in this country, would materially aid in solving the vast problem of tuberculosis here, which is greater in proportion than in any other country on the globe.

Victim Of File Works Accident Recovering

Mr. Stephen Purser, who was seized with a weak spell while on duty as night watchman at the Nicholson File Works on Monday, is able to be about to-day, although very weak.

Mr. Purser stated to the Guide yesterday, that about ten o'clock on Monday night, he felt himself growing weak and endeavoured to reach the telephone to call assistance, but fell on his way. He thinks he remained there a couple of hours when he sufficiently recovered to get up. He managed to reach the barn, where he was again overcome, and he remembered nothing afterwards until he was picked up in the morning by some of the other employees. Mr. Purser was carrying a burning lantern and he fell on this smashing it to atoms, and it was miraculous that his clothing did not ignite or any damage done to the factory.

Hotel Porters Get Into A Scrap

A couple of porters from local hotels got into a mixup at the G. T. R. station this morning, with the result that one of them was arrested and lodged in the cells, and will appear in the Police Court to-morrow morning. The charge will be drunk and disorderly. It appears that one of them was sitting on the seat of his bus, and the other fellow, who was under the influence of liquor, came over to him, and pulled him off his seat. He then wanted to scrap, but there was no scrap in the other fellow. It is said that when the drunk came up and wanted to fight, the other porter hit him with a stone.

A NARROW ESCAPE

Lawrenceburg, Ind., Aug. 3.—Charles A. Runnabaum, labourer on the Ennis Hayes stock farm, started to lead a bull to water, and when near the spring the bull suddenly turned on him and threw him to the ground. The animal then made several attempts to gore Runnabaum, who was loudly calling for help. Runnabaum's collie dog, hearing the call, ran to his assistance and seized the bull by the nose. The bull then turned his attention to the dog, allowing Runnabaum to escape to the barn. Runnabaum suffered four broken ribs and was badly bruised about the head and body.

ANOTHER TARANTULA

Mr. Walter M. Roebuck, grocer, 724 Water street, was somewhat startled this morning to find that a large tarantula had taken possession of a bunch of bananas, which were hanging in his store. The unwelcome visitor was soon confined within the precincts of a glass jar, where it is now on exhibition. It is generally conceded that a bite from one of these insects is sure death, but this theory has been exploded on numerous occasions by well-known entomologists, who claim they will not bite unless they are cornered up.

It is becoming quite common to hear of tarantulas being discovered in bunches of bananas brought into the city. In fact the wholesale fruit men see them so often in their banana rooms that they are utterly indifferent to their presence.

A PROBLEM IN GEOLOGY

No problem in geology appears more complex than that of the origin of the numerous natural hydrocarbons—asphalt, ozokerite, petroleum and natural gas. In fact, geologists are at variance in their theories as to the manner in which these are produced. A great number of the more important hydrocarbons found in petroleum can be produced artificially from organic substances, such as coal, wood and fish oil, while identical or closely allied hydrocarbons result for the interaction of inorganic substances, such as cast iron and chlorohydric acid. In many places petroleum is closely associated with fossiliferous strata; but hydrocarbons exist also in meteorites and in volcanic gases, and they are even obtainable from some igneous rocks.

In a bulletin of the United States Geological Survey, by George F. Becker, the condition of knowledge with reference to the origin of petroleum and other bituminous substances is reviewed. Some oils, says Mr. Becker, are undoubtedly organic, and some are beyond question inorganic. They may have been derived from carbonaceous matter of vegetable or animal origin, and they may have been derived from carbides of iron or other metals. It is also barely possible that the hydrocarbons exist as such in the mass of the earth.

While studying the subject Mr. Becker was led to inquire whether any relation could be detected between the behaviour of the compass needle and the distribution of hydrocarbons. Not much could be expected from a comparison of these phenomena, for magnetite exerts an attraction on the needle whether this ore occurs in solid massive rocks; moreover many volcanic rocks possess polarity. In glancing over a map of the magnetic declination in the United States, Mr. Becker found that the irregularity of the curves of equal declination of the compass were strongly marked in the principal oil regions. The most marked agreement is found through the great Appalachian oil field, which is the area of the greatest variation in declination. In California, also, strong deflections accompany the chain of hydrocarbon deposits.

These observations are to some extent, also supported by conditions in the Caucasus, where great magnetic disturbances exist. While the theory of the inorganic origin of the hydrocarbons as exploited by various scientists is not proved by this study, yet the contention that great oil deposits are generated from iron carbides is strongly borne out by a study of the map of magnetic disturbances in the United States. The map shows that petroleum is intimately associated with magnetic disturbances in the United States. The map shows, that petroleum is intimately associated with magnetic disturbances similar to those arising from the neighbourhood of substances possession sensible magnetic properties, such as iron, nickel, cobalt, and magnetite.—Indianapolis News.

PRICE ON HEADS

Teheran, Persia, Aug. 3.—The price of $100,000 was to-day set on the ex-Shah's head, and $25,000 each on the heads of Salar ed Dowleh and Shua es Sultaneh, the two Kadjar princes who are his principal supporters.

Major Stokes, formerly British Military attache, has entered the Treasury gendarmerie service, being organized by the American Treasurer-General of Persia, Mr. Shuster.

After this had been arranged, the Russian Minister attempted to intervene, threatening the Persian Cabinet with reprisals. For a time the Cabinet showed some alarm, but the contract had been already legally signed.

WILL FIGHT A DUEL

Special to The Examiner

BUDAPEST, HUNGARY, AUG. 3.—A lively fight in the lower house, to be followed by a duel with sabres, enlivened to-day's proceedings. Interruption of a debate started a row, and Herr Pozsgay, a Kossuth Artian, made a dive for Herr Pal, of the government side. Pal met Pozsgay with a staggering blow in the face, and a duel was arranged later.

STATISTICS FOR 1910-11

The above shows that in Peterborough during 1911, there were 16 more deaths than in 1910, 16 fewer births and 5 fewer marriages.

NEW FIRE ALARM SYSTEM INSTALLED

Toronto, Aug. 3.—Residents in the neighbourhood of Yorkville avenue have been making complaints of the disturbance caused by the ringing of the fire alarms on Yorkville firehall, which frequently disturbs citizens at all hours of the night, and, besides, the noise it makes, worries the people to know just where the fire may be, and how near to them.

When Fire Chief Thompson was spoken to in regard to this matter today he assured the general public that it is only a matter of a few months before the annoyance will cease, and it is one which has been gradually stopped throughout the city. At present there are only four fire stations on which the big bell rings the box where the fire is located.

They are: Yorkville, Yonge, Berkeley and Portland. All of these strike the hour, as well, and Wilton avenue has the hour bell, but no fire alarm. All fire bells will be discontinued just as soon as the new central system can be installed, and this will be completed some time this fall, when the building on Adelaide street is ready for occupancy. Then the mechanism for ringing the alarms will be so rapid that no bell could respond. This will not interfere with the ringing of the hours, which is done on a separate bell.

The Chief stated that so far as he was concerned he was willing to stop the ringing long ago, but a couple of years ago, when the matter was broached, the public "went crazy" over the proposal.

"Just the minute a fire broke out downtown everybody wanted to know about it," he stated; "they wanted to know if the fire was near their property, or just how dangerous it was becoming to them."

Every box that is pulled in those districts rings its number on the bell, so that the business man who hears the alarm can tell at once just what corner box has been pulled. When the system breaks up in the fall, however, the only means the public will have to depend upon will be the individual gongs in the halls and the telephone system.

SUSPENSION CONFIRMED

CHICAGO, AUG. 2.— By a unanimous vote the Board of Directors of the National Baseball League to-day upheld President Lynch in his action of fining and suspending Sherwood Magee, outfielder of the Philadelphia club, for assaulting Umpire Finnernan during a recent game with the St. Louis team in Philadelphia.

President Lynch fined Magee $200 and suspended him for the season. The directors, in a lengthy opinion, in which the constitution of the league on the power of the President to enforce discipline by imposing fines and suspending players is quoted, sustain President Lynch in fining Magee and barring him from the game for the season.

Mathewson was hit hard by the Pirates yesterday, but stellar support by his team-mates helped him to trim Pittsburg, with Adams and Steele working, 8-4.

TO COMMENCE WORK ON HUDSON BAY RAILWAY

OTTAWA, AUG. 1.—Active progress on the construction of the Hudson Bay Railway will be made immediately, thus effectively answering one of Mr. Borden's chief complaints in the West in regard to alleged delay on the part of the Government.

Following the Government decision to construct the railway itself, surveys were completed and tenders asked last June for the construction of the first 200 miles, extending from Pas Mission, Keewatin territory, to Thicket Portage, and running in a northeasterly direction through the primitive country north of the Saskatchewan River.

Two Satisfactory Tenders.

Tenders were opened this afternoon In all eight were received, but the choice, it is understood, narrowed down to two, those submitted by Mr. J. D. McArthur and by Mr. M. J. O'Brien. Both of these tenders, it is said, were of a very satisfactory character and within the estimates secured by the Railway Department. The figures, however, will yet have to be gone over in detail before any official announcement of the awarding of the contract will be made.

To Start Work Shortly.

It is the intention of the Government to start the work of construction at the earliest possible time, and it is regarded as likely that the successful contractor will be at work before September 1. Construction of the railway will commence from the north end of the Government bridge over the Saskatchewan at The Pas. If, as is probable, Port Nelson is selected as the terminal port, the railway will be approximately 500 miles in length, and the Government anticipates putting down a considerable portion of the first 200 miles of roadbed, provided for by the present contract, before the advent of winter.—Globe.

Victim Of File Works Accident Recovering

Mr. Stephen Purser, who was seized with a weak spell while on duty as night watchman at the Nicholson File Works on Monday, is able to be about to-day, although very weak.

Mr. Purser stated to the Guide yesterday, that about ten o'clock on Monday night, he felt himself growing weak and endeavoured to reach the telephone to call assistance, but fell on his way. He thinks he remained there a couple of hours when he sufficiently recovered to get up. He managed to reach the barn, where he was again overcome, and he remembered nothing afterwards until he was picked up in the morning by some of the other employees. Mr. Purser was carrying a burning lantern and he fell on this smashing it to atoms, and it was miraculous that his clothing did not ignite or any damage done to the factory.

Hotel Porters Get Into A Scrap

A couple of porters from local hotels got into a mixup at the G. T. R. station this morning, with the result that one of them was arrested and lodged in the cells, and will appear in the Police Court to-morrow morning. The charge will be drunk and disorderly. It appears that one of them was sitting on the seat of his bus, and the other fellow, who was under the influence of liquor, came over to him, and pulled him off his seat. He then wanted to scrap, but there was no scrap in the other fellow. It is said that when the drunk came up and wanted to fight, the other porter hit him with a stone.

A NARROW ESCAPE

Lawrenceburg, Ind., Aug. 3.—Charles A. Runnabaum, labourer on the Ennis Hayes stock farm, started to lead a bull to water, and when near the spring the bull suddenly turned on him and threw him to the ground. The animal then made several attempts to gore Runnabaum, who was loudly calling for help. Runnabaum's collie dog, hearing the call, ran to his assistance and seized the bull by the nose. The bull then turned his attention to the dog, allowing Runnabaum to escape to the barn. Runnabaum suffered four broken ribs and was badly bruised about the head and body.

ANOTHER TARANTULA

Mr. Walter M. Roebuck, grocer, 724 Water street, was somewhat startled this morning to find that a large tarantula had taken possession of a bunch of bananas, which were hanging in his store. The unwelcome visitor was soon confined within the precincts of a glass jar, where it is now on exhibition. It is generally conceded that a bite from one of these insects is sure death, but this theory has been exploded on numerous occasions by well-known entomologists, who claim they will not bite unless they are cornered up.

It is becoming quite common to hear of tarantulas being discovered in bunches of bananas brought into the city. In fact the wholesale fruit men see them so often in their banana rooms that they are utterly indifferent to their presence.

THE WORK CURE

A treatment based on the curative effect of graduated labour is being tried out experimentally at the tuberculosis sanitorium in England with excellent results. It is known as "the work cure" and progress being made under this method is attracting much attention and claiming the undivided interest of all who are enlisted in the ranks battling to exterminate the great white plague. The director of the institution declares that patients undergoing the open-air treatment were found to make better progress when having a certain amount of work to do each day than when they were allowed to lead aimless lives. Practical use has been made of this observation and a systematic table of work suitable for those in different stages of the disease is the result.

This work is divided into six grades, varying from the slightest labour given to those who are unfitted for active exercise—sewing, making mats, etc., to the really heavy work of trenching, mixing concrete and felling trees. Short walks are considered to be light labour for those who can get about, and are followed as progress made by such easy garden employment as picking up wood, carrying baskets of mould and watering plants.

From these occupations the patients are gradually led on to the heavier tasks of using the small shovel, grass shears or a light hoe, eventually progressing to the still more strenuous work of digging broken ground and mowing lawns. When, after the most careful regulation of his work, a patient attains the ambitious post of a chopper of trees, the completion of his "cure" is well within sight.

Those who have successfully passed through the lighter grades of work carry out the latter stages of hard physical labour without shirking and with the greatest benefit to their health. The women, too, do all manner of outdoor work, but their tasks and tools are smaller than those of the men. As a rule, the patients work about four and one-half hours a day, and before they are considered fit to be discharged they are put to work at their customary trade or occupation for six hours a day for three weeks.

At the institution where this experiment has been conducted the net results are as follows: Out of 419 consumptive patients in the last year 192 have shown complete arrest of the disease and 195 have presented very considerable improvement. Thus 80 per cent. have derived great benefit from the treatment and 45 per cent. have apparently been cured. Sixty-eight patients, advanced in the disease, showed only moderate improvement.

Generally speaking, the cases under treatment at this sanitorium are selected, and those who are about to enter the final stages or who are in a feverish, exhausted condition, are excluded from the application of the outdoor system.

It is believed that this system, if undertaken in this country, would materially aid in solving the vast problem of tuberculosis here, which is greater in proportion than in any other country on the globe.

A PROBLEM IN GEOLOGY

No problem in geology appears more complex than that of the origin of the numerous natural hydrocarbons—asphalt, ozokerite, petroleum and natural gas. In fact, geologists are at variance in their theories as to the manner in which these are produced. A great number of the more important hydrocarbons found in petroleum can be produced artificially from organic substances, such as coal, wood and fish oil, while identical or closely allied hydrocarbons result for the interaction of inorganic substances, such as cast iron and chlorohydric acid. In many places petroleum is closely associated with fossiliferous strata; but hydrocarbons exist also in meteorites and in volcanic gases, and they are even obtainable from some igneous rocks.

In a bulletin of the United States Geological Survey, by George F. Becker, the condition of knowledge with reference to the origin of petroleum and other bituminous substances is reviewed. Some oils, says Mr. Becker, are undoubtedly organic, and some are beyond question inorganic. They may have been derived from carbonaceous matter of vegetable or animal origin, and they may have been derived from carbides of iron or other metals. It is also barely possible that the hydrocarbons exist as such in the mass of the earth.

While studying the subject Mr. Becker was led to inquire whether any relation could be detected between the behaviour of the compass needle and the distribution of hydrocarbons. Not much could be expected from a comparison of these phenomena, for magnetite exerts an attraction on the needle whether this ore occurs in solid massive rocks: moreover many volcanic rocks possess polarity. In glancing over a map of the magnetic declination in the United States, Mr. Becker found that the irregularity of the curves of equal declination on the compass were strongly marked in the principal oil regions. The most marked agreement is found through the great Appalachian oil field, which is the area of the greatest variation in declination. In California, also, strong deflections accompany the chain of hydrocarbon deposits.

These observations are to some extent, also supported by conditions in the Caucasus, where great magnetic disturbances exist. While the theory of the inorganic origin of the hydrocarbons as exploited by various scientists is not proved by this study, yet the contention that great oil deposits are generated from iron carbides is strongly borne out by a study of the map of magnetic disturbances in the United States. The map shows that petroleum is intimately associated with magnetic disturbances in the United States. The map shows, that petroleum is intimately associated with magnetic disturbances similar to those arising from the neighbourhood of substances possession sensible magnetic properties, such as iron, nickel, cobalt, and magnetite.—Indianapolis News.

PRICE ON HEADS

Teheran, Persia, Aug. 3.—The price of $100,000 was to-day set on the ex-Shah's head, and $25,000 each on the heads of Salar ed Dowieh and Shua es Sultaneh, the two Kadjar princes who are his principal supporters.

Major Stokes, formerly British Military attache, has entered the Treasury gendarmerie service, being organised by the American Treasurer-General of Persia, Mr. Shuster.

After this had been arranged, the Russian Minister attempted to intervene, threatening the Persian Cabinet with reprisals. For a time the Cabinet showed some alarm, but the contract had been already legally signed.

WILL FIGHT A DUEL

Special to The Examiner

BUDAPEST, HUNGARY, AUG. 3.—A lively fight in the lower house, to be followed by a duel with sabres, enlivened to-day's proceedings. Interruption of a debate started a row, and Herr Pozsgay, a Kossuth Artian, made a dive for Herr Pal, of the government side. Pal met Pozsgay with a staggering blow in the face, and a duel was arranged later.

Births	96	42
Marriages	20	25

The above shows that in Peterborough during 1911, there were 16 more deaths than in 1910, 16 fewer births and 5 fewer marriages.

NEW FIRE ALARM SYSTEM INSTALLED

Toronto, Aug. 3.—Residents in the neighbourhood of Yorkville avenue have been making complaints of the disturbance caused by the ringing of the fire alarms on Yorkville firehall, which frequently disturbs citizens at all hours of the night, and, besides, the noise it makes, worries the people to know just where the fire may be, and how near to them.

When Fire Chief Thompson was spoken to in regard to this matter today he assured the general public that it is only a matter of a few months before the annoyance will cease, and it is one which has been gradually stopped throughout the city. At present there are only four fire stations on which the big bell rings the box where the fire is located.

They are: Yorkville, Yonge, Berkeley and Portland. All of these strike the hour, as well, and Wilton avenue has the hour bell, but no fire alarm. All fire bells will be discontinued just as soon as the new central system can be installed, and this will be completed some time this fall, when the building on Adelaide street is ready for occupancy. Then the mechanism for ringing the alarms will be so rapid that no bell could respond. This will not interfere with the ringing of the hours, which is done on a separate bell.

The Chief stated that so far as he was concerned he was willing to stop the ringing long ago, but a couple of years ago, when the matter was broached, the public "went crazy" over the proposal.

"Just the minute a fire broke out downtown everybody wanted to know about it," he stated; "they wanted to know if the fire was near their property, or just how dangerous it was becoming to them."

Every box that is pulled in those districts rings its number on the bell, so that the business man who hears the alarm can tell at once just what corner box has been pulled. When the system breaks up in the fall, however, the only means the public will have to depend upon will be the individual gongs in the halls and the telephone system.

SUSPENSION CONFIRMED

CHICAGO, AUG. 2.—By a unanimous vote the Board of Directors of the National Baseball League to-day upheld President Lynch in his action of fining and suspending Sherwood Magee, outfielder of the Philadelphia club, for assaulting Umpire Finnernan during a recent game with the St. Louis team in Philadelphia.

President Lynch fined Magee $200 and suspended him for the season. The directors, in a lengthy opinion, in which the constitution of the league on the power of the President to enforce discipline by imposing fines and suspending players is quoted, sustain President Lynch in fining Magee and barring him from the game for the season.

Mathewson was hit hard by the Pirates yesterday, but stellar support by his team-mates helped him to trim Pittsburg, with Adams and Steele working. 8-4.

DROWNING ACCIDENTS

Four Fatalities Reported in Montreal Harbour—A Tragedy in Hamilton

FELL INTO CANAL

Montreal, Aug. 3.—Four victims of drowning were taken from the water of the harbor yesterday, and in three of the cases the victims were under 20 years of age.

With his boat overladen with driftwood which he had gathered from the harbor to help in the support of his mother and sisters, John Archibald MacPherson, 19 years of age, lost his life when his boat swamped Tuesday afternoon.

The body was recovered and taken to the morgue, where it was identified by the mother yesterday morning. The coroner's inquest disposed of the case as one of accidental drowning.

Men on board the market boat Princess yesterday morning saw the corpse of a boy floating in the canal at Lachine. The police were notified and the body was recovered between Cote St, Paul and Lachine and identified as that of Zeotique Leduc, 8 years of age, who had been missing from his home at 34 St. Louis street, Lachine, since Monday night.

Victor Ethier, 18 years of age, who resided with his parents at Beaubien street, met his death while in bathing with a couple of other little chaps, all of whom had walked out to the Back River for the purpose of learning to swim. The tragedy occurred at the south end of the bridge, known as Pont Viau, where the current is quite strong. The body has not been recovered.

Still another victim was recovered from the Wellington Basin early yesterday morning, near the Dominion Coal Co.'s sheds. He was a middle-aged man, dressed in blue serge coat, trousers and vest and black boots; $3.41 in money was found in his pockets as well as his watch. He is awaiting identification at the morgue.

Found Dead in Well.

Ottawa, Aug. 3.—Staff-Sergt. Thompson, a well-known militiaman, and for years caretaker of the Government magazine here, was found dead yesterday in an old well near the Rockliffe rifle range.

The magazine was located close by and Thompson was engaged in piping water from the well which is a shallow affair. It is believed he was overcome by the heat and fell in.

Boy Fell Into Canal.

Hamilton, Ont., Aug. 3.—Twelve-year-old Edgar Cull, while fishing on the Turbinia Steamship Co.'s pier, was drowned at noon yesterday. The lad left his playmate at one end of the dock to secure a cork from a group of boys at the other end and unseen by his chum, fell, or was pushed in the water, which at that point is about twelve feet deep. The group of boys ran as soon as the splash took place, and the drowned lad's companions ran for help to the police. The latter are seeking the other lads.

FROM CITY TO CITY

Two Prominent Aviators Compete in Inter-urban Flight—Both Finish Without Accident

HAMILTON TO TORONTO

Toronto, Aug. 3.—This city saw the successful finish of the first city to city aeroplane race that has ever been held on the American continent, last night, when J. A. McCurdy completed a flight of fifty miles, landing at the foot of the Cherry street bridge on Fisherman's Island, 32 minutes after leaving the Hamilton aviation field, four miles west of that city and Charles Willard, Mr. McCurdy's partner in the McCurdy-Willard Aeroplane Co., landed safely in Exhibition Park at 6.45 o'clock, having left the Hamilton field 13 minutes in advance of Mr. McCurdy.

The flight was given by these aviators purely in the interests of the sport and science of aviation, and each flew in a machine of his own construction.

The men had intended landing at Donlands, where the big meet opens this evening, but when they approached Toronto flying over the lake, they saw that it would be impossible to cross the city, as nothing could be seen through the dense clouds of smoke and haze which hung over it like a cloud.

J. A. D. McCURDY

The aviators had vastly different experiences on their trip. McCurdy flew at an altitude of 3,000 feet for almost the entire distance and found ideal wind and atmospheric conditions. Willard, in his heavier machine, flew much lower and passed through continual gusts of wind and pockets of air. His altitude for the flight was between 500 and 600 feet.

All day long the city buzzed with discussion of the proposed flight and the high wind which prevailed throughout the day led many to doubt that it would be made.

Both Mr. McCurdy and Mr. Willard were greatly pleased with the result of their flight, which is the first of its kind in the continent. The men are the more proud as the machines which they fly are of their own personal design and make and are the creatures of their very tender care and intimate regard.

Both regard the flight as a valuable experience and a demonstration of the varying air conditions at different altitudes: McCurdy struck straight up into the blue for 3,000 feet and was altogether untroubled until he approached the heated clouds over the city, which made him come down. Willard flew at the lesser altitude of from 100 to 600 feet and was in continual trouble with puffs, gusts, squalls and air pockets.

While making his initial flight in his Blériot monoplane on the aviation field at Donlands last night, J. D. Jackson, the plucky Toronto amateur aviator, came to grief. Though his machine was badly smashed — one wing, the propeller and part of the frame being broken—Jackson himself escaped uninjured.

Jackson has been working on his machine for the last two weeks at Donlands, and it was only yesterday that he received his propeller from New York, which was the last thing necessary to make the machine ready for flight. It had been Mr. Jackson's intention to have Richter, the German aviator, who was injured at Hanlan's Point, give him some preliminary coaching, but as Richter's condition prevented him from being present when Mr. Jackson was ready to fly, the aviator pluckily decided to make an ascent himself, although he had never been in the air, and his knowledge of aeroplaning was purely theoretical.

Victims of the Gale.

The schooner Emily Anderson, Maitland, N.S., for Philadelphia, anchored off Chatham, lost her foresail and part of the deck load of lumber. Both vessels were probably victims of Friday's gale.

Winnipeg Railway Deal.

Winnipeg, Aug. 3.—An announcement received by Mayor Evans from Toronto yesterday states that Sir William Mackenzie will come to Winnipeg personally to conduct the negotiations for the sale to the city of the Winnipeg Electric Railway.

The Canadian Northern announces that it will require 20,000 men to construct the Port Arthur to Sudbury branch of the line.

Siamese Twins Born.

Pittsburg, Aug. 3.—Male twins, fully developed and joined together at the shoulders, necks and hips, were born to Mrs. Helen Sikoski, Homestead. Their arms are joined at the shoulders. They have four legs and two heads.

BEGINS IN ONTARIO

Sir Wilfrid to Open his Campaign on August 15th—Reciprocity is the Issue

WILL THEN GO EAST

Ottawa, Aug. 3.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier will open his platform campaign on Tuesday, August 15, in one of the Ontario ridings. The place for the opening rally has not yet been finally fixed, but it will be at a strategic point in the southwestern group of counties along Lake Erie, where the reciprocity issues gives the Liberals good hope of capturing several of the seats now held by the Conservatives. Sir Wilfrid will in his opening address make reciprocity the great issue of the campaign, his speech being in the main an amplification of the concinct and compelling statement of the Government's case as presented in his published appeal to the Canadian people. He will enter upon the campaign in splendid physical form, and with a zest for the fray born of absolute confidence as to the result and of enthusiastic conviction of the justice and wisdom of the cause for which Liberalism stands in the present contest.

On Thursday, 17th instant, the Premier will speak at Three Rivers at Hon. Jacques Bureau's constituency. On the following day he will speak in the city of Quebec. The following week the Premier will devote to meetings in the Montreal district, comprising some forty constituencies. From August 28 to September 3 he will be on the Maritime Provinces for a series of meetings, speaking at Halifax and St. John, N.B.

On September 4 Sir Wilfrid will again be in Ontario, where he will put in a week addressing meetings at various points to be fixed later. The following week he will devote to the ridings of the Quebec district. He will wind up the five weeks' series of meetings with final rallies on September 15, 16 and 17 at points not yet determined.

R. L. Borden returned to Ottawa yesterday from a conference with his lieutenants in Montreal. He goes to Toronto for Saturday's gathering of Ontario Conservatives. Hon. Robert Rogers, who is ill in Montreal, is [illegible] and the Toronto meeting.

It is announced that Thomas Chase Casgrain, who will arrive from Europe on Friday, will accept the Opposition candidature in Nicolet. Mr. Casgrain was at one time attorney-general and later on Federal member for Montmorency.

Bourassa Disdains Both.

Montreal, Aug. 3.—In Le Devoir this afternoon Henri Bourassa publishes what purports to be a statement of the Nationalist position in the coming campaign. In substance he lays down both party leaders' attempts to take sides in the reciprocity question, setting it aside as a minor issue, and calling upon the electors of Quebec to judge Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his Government particularly as regards their policies, as evidenced in his naval policy.

[illegible] Opposition seem desirous of snatching from the judgment of the people, the most important without doubt is that collection of problems grouped together under the name 'imperialist,' and particularly the contribution of Canada to imperial armaments on sea and land; the participation of the Canadian people in men and money to the imperial wars where the fate of Canada is not at stake.'

Expects a Walkover.

Montreal, Aug. 3.—The Royal Edward arrived in port last evening carrying among its passengers Premier A. L. Sifton of Alberta, and Premier Walter Scott of Saskatchewan. Both proceeded last evening to Ottawa for a short stop before returning home.

Neither Premier had anything to say on the political situation. Hon. Walter Scott, when asked if he would take part in the fight, smilingly answered: "Not this!" and expressed the optimistic opinion that in his province it would be a walkover for his party, the visit of the Opposition leader, notwithstanding.

Joe Martin to Take Part.

Vancouver, B.C., Aug. 3.—Joe Martin, M.P., will take part in the Federal elections. Writing to a friend here he says he will sail early in September, making the trip to Vancouver.

The city's nomination convention date will be decided at a meeting tonight. New Westminster Liberals are to name candidates August 11.

It is likely that John Oliver, former Liberal leader in the House and now president of the Provincial Liberal Association, will get the nomination.

Fisher at Waterloo.

Waterloo, Que., Aug. 3.—The first gun of the Federal election campaign of 1911 boomed forth here Tuesday, and the first advance was made when Hon. Sydney Fisher, Minister of Agriculture, addressed the farmers of Shefford County at a meeting held in the Town Hall here.

One of the most important features of Mr. Fisher's address was his announcement of the intention of the Government, if returned, to change the rules of procedure in the House so that obstructionist tactics will in future be impossible. His entire address dealt almost altogether with reciprocity. Several times he severely criticised the methods of the Anti-Reciprocity League, showing the fallacies in their contention against the pact.

New Residents Barred.

Ottawa, Aug. 3.—A peculiar point in connection with the coming Dominion elections has been brought to light by City Clerk Boult of Hull. Any residents of Hull making the franchise cannot vote, unless their names are contained in the list of electors which was published at the last elections.

The city clerk states that according to the laws of the Province of Quebec no resident in the province cannot obtain a vote as is done in Ontario by registering. Only those whose names are contained in the last revised list of electors are entitled to a vote. This will mean that only about 3,600 will be entitled to vote at the September elections.

Willing to Take Partner's Place.

Ottawa, Aug. 3.—"I shall be a candidate for the House of Commons," said Mr. Alphonse Provost yesterday. Mr. Provost is a Liberal, and is a partner of A. Allard, who was M.P. here, but who has announced that he has retired.

Students Go Liberal.

Montreal, Aug. 3.—The first development of the election campaign here is a new organization known as the Young Liberal Association of Montreal. This society came into being on Tuesday, and the members come from what was always supposed to be the heart of the Nationalist stronghold, Laval University. At the meeting the young men pledged themselves to the Liberal party.

Victor Beique, son of Senator Beique, was chosen president and Paul Mercier, son of Judge Mercier, secretary.

Low Water in the Ottawa.

Ottawa, Aug. 3.—An examination of the lockmasters' book shows the Ottawa River has sunk about 2½ feet startling fact that the water in the since last May, when it stood at 38 feet 8 inches in the Ottawa River. Since that time it has been sinking rapidly until now the water stands at 7 feet 11 inches, and bids fair to go much lower if there is no serious rainfall.

In the Ottawa River it has not affected navigation so far. In the Rideau the water is extremely low, and it may get dangerous for the boats of the Rideau Lakes Navigation Co. to make their trips.

Glidden Route Changed.

New York, Aug. 3.—The Glidden automobile tour of 1911, originally planned to be run from Washington to Montreal via New England points last June, will be run to the south instead, according to an announcement made last night.

New England has been the scene of several Glidden tours and this popularity, coupled with the fact that the south has made much progress toward road improvement, has prompted the change of route.

Hudson Bay In Two Years.

Montreal, Aug. 3.—M. J. O'Brien of Renfrew, one of the contractors who tendered for the construction of the first two hundred miles of the Hudson Bay Railway, was in town last night. He stated that with work started at once it would be comparatively easy to complete the section within the two years' limit stipulated by the Government.

In The World of Sport

DAN WHETUNG'S BRAVES PLAY GOOD BALL

Chemong Park cottagers are looking forward with great interest to tomorrow afternoon's game between the Park aggregation and the young braves from Chemong Village. Friday last the Indians were at home to the whites, and by a splendid nine inning rally drove the visitors pitcher off the mound, A little coaching and a knowledge of some inside ball tricks could make the Indians a real good organization. Although naturally quiet, they can raise a pretty holler when they imagine that some trick is being slipped over on them, and the umpire who handles a game in that village to the satisfaction of all parties concerned, deserves a medal of large dimensions.

Manager Whetung is making a distinct success of sport in the village, and it will not be long until the different hockey and ball teams under his charge will attain the perfection which will secure their admission into our city league.
